In WWII he served 31 months as a lieutenant and signal officer on the U.S.S. PENNSYLVANIA. After the war, he divided his time between homes in Delray Beach and Tuxedo Park, N.Y. The family moved permanently to Lake Como in 1954.

Besides Phebe (Cornell), whom he married in 1933, Pao leaves five children: Henry J. Maresi, Cassandra M. Biachini, Phebe Ann Bellard, Alice Maresi, and Beatrice Ernemann, twins, and nine grandchildren. To them we offer our sincere sympathy.

Arthur Stanley Bland '35

ART DIED in St. Louis after a protracted siege with Alzheimer's Disease Feb. 2, 1990.

Art was born in St. Louis and was educated at the St. Louis Country School and Hun School. Upon graduation, he entered Princeton. After his sophomore year, he returned to St. Louis. In 1936 Art married Gertrude Grove.

Art's business career was centered in St. Louis. He commenced with the Graham Paper Co., after which he became associated with the Mercantile Trust Co. as a trust officer. Following this banking experience, he became sales manager for Grove Laboratories until it was taken over by Bristol Myers in 1968. Art then joined the Board of Directors of St. Louis's City Bank and became director of marketing, a position he retained until 1983.

Art loved to be with people. He was an ardent duck shooter, a good golfer, and a prominent member of several St. Louis clubs. His friendliness was best expressed helping people at the bank—it was always considered a privilege to be his client.

Art is survived by his wife, Gertrude; a son, Arthur Stanley Bland III; three daughters, Gertrude Bland Platt, Cynthia Bland Gerard, Marian Bland; and five grandchildren. The Class extends its sympathies to his family and friends.

John R. Caulk Jr. '35

JACK DIED of cancer Sept. 27, 1990, in Lexington, Ky., after a brief illness. A native of St. Louis, he came to Princeton from the St. Louis Country Day School, majored in architecture, and applied this and his mechanical aptitude to the heating and cooling industry. Having received a reserved field artillery commission as an undergraduate in early 1942, Jack joined the 25th Lighting Division of the 89th Field Artillery, achieved the rank of major, and served four years of combat, earning the Bronze Star and the Silver Star decorations.

Jack then joined the Hussman Refrigerator Co., where he was instrumental in the development of the open reach-in freezer. He became president and then a director of the company, and was fully retired in 1975. He was a former president of the Princeton Club of St. Louis, the St. Louis Country Club, and the University Club in St. Louis; a board member of the St. Louis Union Trust Co. and Christian Hospital Northwest; and a member of our Alumni Council.

In recent years Jack and his wife, nee Mary Whitney Huguelet, had been living in Lexington, and on their 42-ft. cruiser SNOWMAN, based in Delray Beach, Fla. His love of sailing and timbering were well known, and he met and traveled frequently with his chums of '35.

Jack is survived by his widow Whitty, a sister Elizabeth M. Lucas, his former wife Mrs. Thomas S. McPheeters Jr., a son John R. III '60 (one of our first Class sons to graduate in '60), a daughter, Sally C. Russell, four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. To them our Class extends its heartfelt sympathy.

James N. Robertson '35

JIM DIED Oct. 3, 1990, in West Chester, Penn., and was buried at Arlington Natl. Cemetery, Fort Meyer, Va., with full military honors.

Jim prepared at Mercersburg Academy. At Princeton he majored in politics, with honors during his junior year; roomed with Rod Henkel and Ed Brisach; played freshman football; and was a member of Dial Lodge. After graduating from Penn Law School in 1938, Jim began to practice law in Media, Penn. Recently he was honored as a 50-year member of the Delaware Cty. Bar Assn.

Jim served two terms in the Penn. legislature as a member of the House of Representatives (1949-51). He also served as the recorder of deeds of Delaware Cty., 1980-84, and at the time of his death was the secretary-treasurer of the Delaware Cty. Industrial Development Authority.

At graduation Jim was commissioned as a reserve officer in the Field Artillery and served during WWII in Europe with the 65th Infantry Division as a general staff officer in intelligence. He was awarded the Bronze star for valor, the French Croix de Guerre and the Russian Guard Medal. He also achieved the rank of brigadier general in the Penn. Natl. Guard in 1965.

Jim was a founder of the Media, Penn. High Twelve Club. In 1990, he was named Man of the Year by the High Twelve Intl. for serving as past president and general counsel before retiring in 1988.

He is survived by his wife of 49 years, Jane Neumann Robertson, a son George, daughter Nancy, and three grandchildren, to all of whom the Class sends deepest sympathies.

Albert Martin Cooke Jr. '42

AL DIED Sept. 7, 1990, at his home in Louisville, Ky. At the time of his death he was retired, having spent his career in industry, mostly manufacturing. Al grew up in Brooklyn, N.Y. and came to Princeton from Brooklyn Poly Prep. He majored in chemical engineering and was a member of Cannon Club. During the war, Al joined Linde Air Products and Chemicals Corp. in Patterson, N.J. He subsequently worked for Susquehanna Products as plant engineer, also in N.J., and then moved to Louisville, where he became V.P. of Laminating Services, Inc.

Al was married to Marie Strauckamp Apr. 7, 1945, and they had four children. To his son, William J., and his daughters, Ann, Patricia, and Cathy, the Class extends its sincere condolences.

James Hartman Blessing '49

JIM DIED of cardiopulmonary arrest, brought on by post-polio syndrome Dec. 17, 1990, at his home in Washington, D.C. Born June 13, 1928 in Philadelphia, Jim prepared for college at Central H.S. At Princeton he majored in English, graduating with honors. He was on the staff of the NASSAU LIT, sang with the Chapel Choir, worked at Commons and at the Student Sandwich Agency. He was a member of Prospect Club.

Following Princeton, Jim worked toward his Ph.D. in English at Harvard, Stanford, and the Univ. of Colorado, studying and teaching as he went. He returned to Harvard for two years, earned an M.A. in government there, and finally his doctorate in medieval literature from Stanford. Jim married Juliette Breffort in 1955, and in 1958 joined the U.S. Office of Education in Washington, D.C.

In 1966 Jim joined the National Endowment for the Humanities in Washington, where he became director of the division of fellowships and seminars, and the division of research. He retired in 1987. Over the years, Jim and Juliette enjoyed many summer vacations in Europe, visiting relatives. Jim's love of classical music and art continued throughout his life.

In addition to his wife, Juliette, Jim is survived by his mother, Caroline Blessing, and a brother, John Blessing III '52. To each of them the Class extends its profound sympathy.

Francis Xavier Houghton '49

WE LOST Francis Houghton, "X" to many of us, to a sudden heart attack suffered at his Manhattan home Oct. 3, 1990. Francis was born June 24, 1927, in Hartford, Conn., and prepared for college at Exeter. He served in the Army as an infantryman in Europe from 1945 to 1947. At Princeton, "X" majored in sociology and was a member of Ivy Club.

Following graduation in 1951, Francis joined Benton & Bowles advertising agency in N.Y., in time working as an account executive and copywriter. That same year, he married Mollie Stark, they had a son, and later divorced. "X" subsequently married Averell Turner, they had two sons, and were divorced in the mid-1980s. In 1958 he joined Ogilvy, Benson & Mather, and became a senior V.P. and director, and then executive director of their Ogilvy & Mather/2 subsidiary.

In 1986 Francis joined Biederman, Kelly and Schaffer advertising agency as executive V.P., the position he held at his death. He was a passionate collector of antique porcelain and American impressionist painting, and was a contributor of articles to the advertising trade press. He had been a member of the Players Club of N.Y. and the Nantucket Yacht Club.

Francis is survived by his three sons, Alan, David, and Nicholas; a brother; and his fiancée, Katherine Chiles. To all of them we extend our deepest sympathy.

The Class of 1949

John Joseph Kunkowski '49

JOHN SUFFERED a sudden heart attack while driving near his home in Cockeysville, Md. and passed away Sept. 24, 1990, at the Greater Baltimore Medical Center.

Born in Baltimore Jan. 22, 1927, John—known to many of us as "Count"—prepared for Princeton at Gilman, where he was active in the debating club, Christian Assn., dramatics, and as a member of the football, wrestling, and lacrosse teams. John served in the Army Medical Corps from July 1945 to Jan. 1947 in the E.T.O. with the rank of T/3.

At Princeton, John was pre-med, majored in biology and graduated cum laude. He also studied classical music on the piano-forte, and was a member of Quadrangle Club. John married Lenore Witold of Baltimore in 1948, and over time they had three sons, John Clay, Gregg W., and Grant A. Kunkowski.

Following graduation, and some graduate work at Johns Hopkins Medical School, in 1952 John joined the Davison Chemical Co., which became a division of W. R. Grace & Co. He also acquired a master's degree from Harvard Business School. At Grace, he moved from operations, through technical service, to sales, and was general sales manager of their chemical division at his retirement 11 years ago.

John loved sailing on Chesapeake Bay, and was a member of the Baltimore Yacht Club and the Sue Creek Power Squadron. In addition to his wife and three sons, John is survived by three brothers, Francis, Edmund, and Andrew. Our hearts go out to them all.

William Richmond Tracy Jr. '49

WE ARE GREATLY SADDENED at the loss of Rich Tracy to pancreatic cancer, which was diagnosed Feb. 15 and led to his passing June 3, 1990.

Rich was born in Philadelphia Sept. 9, 1927, and prepared at Pingry. At Princeton he majored in civil engineering, was a member of Chapel Choir, and worked for Student Aid as a cashier, gateman, and newspaper deliveryman. He was a member of Elm Club.

Following Princeton, he went to work as a construction engineer in N.J. and then on an air base in Iceland. He followed that with some work in city planning, then returned to heavy construction, working for DuPont in Wilmington. He married Doris David there in May 1957. They had two daughters and a son. DuPont took them to Kansas City, and he moved on to become a supervising engineer with the airplane division of Boeing in Renton, Wash.

In 1970 Rich joined the Dept. of Public Works for the City of Tacoma, Wash., and continued as special projects engineer up to his death. He enjoyed working around their home in Bellevue, Wash., was active in church work, and retained his fondness for the outdoors.

Rich is survived by his wife, Doris, daughters Kathleen and Penelope, and son W. Richmond Tracy III. Rich's family enjoyed a long Princeton connection—his father, uncle, and five cousins had attended the University. To all family members of our dear classmate, the Class extends its heartfelt sympathy.

James Worthington '59

JAMES WORTHINGTON died Aug. 27, 1990, in Basra, Iraq. He had suffered a heart attack while being held hostage by the Iraqi government shortly after that country invaded Kuwait. He was the first American to die there after westerners were barred from leaving. Jim had been in Kuwait as a consultant for the Alahi Bank of Kuwait and lived in a hotel in Kuwait City. Before moving to Kuwait he worked for 28 years in various foreign branches of Citibank of N.Y. At different times he was stationed with his family in Colombia, Brazil, Liberia, Indonesia, Singapore and India. He went to work at Citibank two years after graduating from Princeton, where he studied foreign affairs. Born in Marathon, Tex., he prepared for Princeton at Mercersburg Academy in Pennsylvania. At Princeton he roomed with Ed Laws, Henry Rhoads, Dave Robb, and Walt Whitmoyer in Little Hall. In his senior year he was president of Key and Seal. Before going to Kuwait he had been at the Citibank's main office in N.Y. and lived with his wife, Katharine, and two children in Woodstock, N.Y. To her, and his other survivors the Class extends its sympathies.

Joseph Craig Graddy '66

JOSEPH CRAIG GRADDY perished July 15, 1990, in a trekking accident along the Inca Trail in the Andes Mountains of Peru. He fell 300 feet to his death while photographing a panoramic view.

The outdoors were always important to Joe. He loved the mountains and the woods. As a youth growing up in California, he had hiked extensively in the Sierra Mountains and climbed Mt. Whitney. His love of nature's splendor took him to Vermont, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and Canada for skiing and hiking.

Born in Santa Monica and raised in the Los Angeles area, Joe prepared for Princeton at the Harvard School in North Hollywood, Calif., where he captained the wrestling team. At Princeton, he was a member of the freshman fencing team and Terrace Club.

He withdrew from Princeton in 1964, studied at the Univ. of Copenhagen and received a degree in mechanical engineering from U.C.L.A. and an M.B.A. from the Univ. of Washington.

Joe never married. At the time of his death, he was employed by the Dept. of the Interior in the Bureau of Mineral Management. He owned a home on Bull Run Mountain in Haymarket, Va.

He is survived by his parents, Joseph and Jean Graddy, who live in Pacific Palisades, Calif. His mother's words echo the sentiments of the Class of 1966: "We miss Joe, but few people are fortunate enough to leave this earth doing something they love and enjoy."

Earl R. Rolph '32

EARL R. ROLPH '32, former chairman of the Dept. of Economics at the U.C.—Berkeley, died at his home Oct. 25, 1988. Born in Milwaukee, Wisc., he received his baccalaureate degree from the College of Wooster (Ohio), an M.A. in economics from Princeton and his Ph.D. from Cornell in 1936. He taught briefly at Cornell and at Colgate before coming to Berkeley in 1937. During WWII he served as an economist in the Office of Price Administration. He achieved the rank of full professor in 1955. Prof. Rolph was as well known on the Berkeley campus for his sensitivity to student and collegial concerns as he was for his intl. expertise on matters of finance, taxation, banking, and intl. trade. He was honored as a Guggenheim fellow (for work in London) and as Ford research prof. at Berkeley. He wrote several books and journal articles, and retired in 1977.

He is survived by his son, a sister, a niece, and two grandchildren, to whom sincere sympathy is extended. Mrs. Rolph preceded him in death by less than one year.

Donald Whitehouse Curtis '42

DONALD WHITEHOUSE CURTIS '42, senior economist with the Treasury in Washington, D.C., died of leukemia in Sibley Memorial Hospital Oct. 25, 1989. He was 71 years old. A native of Lewiston, Me., he earned his bachelor's degree at Bates College. He entered a doctoral program in economics at Princeton and completed his M.A. before being sent to Germany in 1945 as an economist for the U.S. military government. He joined the Treasury in 1946 and was employed there for the rest of his life. His expertise lay in international exchange and balance of payments. In the late 1940s, the Treasury sent Curtis to work in Bern, Switzerland and in Paris, France, in the implementation of the Marshall Plan. He then returned to Washington and was promoted to chief of the Treasury's European division. He served for 25 years as head of the balance of payments program and was an active participant in the Paris meetings of the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development. In 1987 he became a senior consultant economist.

Profound condolences are extended to his widow, Mary, his three children, six grandchildren, and brother.

Thor E. Wood '59

THOR E. WOOD '59, age 55, chief of the Performing Arts Research Ctr. of the N.Y. Public Library, died Apr. 28, 1988, at Beth Israel Hospital in N.Y.C. The crowning achievement of his professional life was the development of the Performing Arts Research Center to a position of international prestige under his guidance. Not only did he provide administrative leadership, but also, as both musicologist and librarian, he directed the growth of the four basic collections: dance, music, recorded sound archives, and the theater collection. A music major from Pomona College, master of library science from U.C.—Berkeley, Mr. Wood was awarded the degree of master of fine arts in musicology at Princeton in 1959.

Belatedly we extend condolences to his widow, Ann, and his daughters Elizabeth and Frances.

Walter C. Benzing '64

WALTER C. BENZING '64, age 63, pioneer in the field of semiconductors, died Nov. 2, 1987, at his home in Saratoga, Calif. Born in N.Y.C., Dr. Benzing earned his B.S. (Phi Beta Kappa) in chemical engineering at the Univ. of Rochester in 1943. During WWII he served as a Naval officer in the Pacific. After the war he earned an M.S. at M.I.T. and a Ph.D. at Princeton, both in chemical engineering. His career included Merck and Co., Inc., Union Carbide Corp., his partnership named Applied Materials Inc., Benzing Technologies Inc., a company founded by his sons, plus consulting and academic advisory work. He holds several U.S. patents, is the author of numerous technical papers on semiconductors, and is a pioneer in early technology collaboration with the Japanese and, more recently, the Chinese.

Sympathy is extended belatedly (with sincere apologies) to his widow, Ruth, his sons, Steven, David, and Jeffrey, his brother, Fred, and four grandchildren.

THE PRINCETON LAMP

A handsome token of your Princeton days. This classic brass and marble lamp is as appealing for its quality as it is for the ties it represents with your alma mater. The precisely-crafted bas-relief university medallion gleams with a 24 kt. gold finish, and the subtle variation in the marble's pattern and hue makes each lamp naturally unique.

To order the Princeton Lamp, send the completed order form with a check or money order for $195 (price includes shipping and sales tax) in care of the Princeton Lamp Agency to: F. Owen Evans '91, The Princeton Lamp Agency, 216 West College Hall, Princeton University, Princeton, NJ 08544. TRIANGLE'S 100TH!

Merge With Traffic Without Blending Into It.

Every morning it's the same: you jump into your car, make a few lefts, make a few rights, and muscle your way onto the highway that separates everyone's home from everyone's office. In any other car, this routine might quickly become tiresome.

Of course, that's precisely why the Lexus LS400 was created:

to keep the ordinary from slipping into the mundane.

For while any car can be designed to battle the masses, the LS400 was also designed to please the individual. Perhaps that's why people who know cars consider it a great automobile rather than the newest status symbol.

Just ask the experts. Since day one, they've maintained there's nothing on the road quite like a Lexus.

This theory is easily supported.

All you have to do is put your foot on the gas. The automobile's 250-hp V8 will keep you from being intimidated by traffic.

Its looks, of course, will keep you from being confused with it.

The Relentless Pursuit Of Perfection.

FROM THE ARCHIVES

The 1863-64 Nassau Nine, as the varsity baseball team was then known, had a good record, winning seven and losing four against amateur teams from New York and Philadelphia. In those early days of the game's evolution, pitchers were forbidden to throw overhand, gloves were unheard-of comforts in a manly sport, and Princeton players were fined ten cents for "profane or impious language while assembled for exercise" but only five cents for disputing the umpire. The star of the team was Frederick P. Henry 1866, whom many consider to have been the first pitcher to purposely throw a curve ball (or "twist ball," as it was called) in a game. Henry (standing at left with ball) so baffled one batter that he exclaimed in disgust, "Who is that infernal Spaniard anyway?"

Keep the Mandatory Thesis

We write in response to Professor Lawrence Stone's thoughtful essay in the PAW of March 20 suggesting that Princeton do away with the compulsory senior thesis. During our combined eight decades in academia, we have participated in many discussions on the issues raised by Professor Stone. Although one can argue persuasively and logically for or against the mandatory thesis, we find it impossible to address this issue—or the question of a Princeton education—solely on the logical grounds that are usually our home turf. To us, the issue is simply this: The experience of our senior theses was far and away the most important component of our Princeton education. We are among those, in Professor Stone's words, "who suddenly discovered the excitement of scholarship as they dug deeper and deeper into their theses." That experience was our key to a new world; it provided the incentive to move on to graduate work and formed the basis of our professional careers.

We have participated in many forms of teaching during our careers—some seminars have been superbly stimulating and some theses relatively uninspiring. But in no way can a seminar provide an intellectual challenge of depth, scope, and lasting impact comparable to that which results from the year-long lonely probing of a serious senior thesis. There is simply no substitute for the "learning by doing" of a thesis project. The Princeton tradition of a required thesis remains the uniquely valuable hallmark of a Princeton education.

Don't give it away—unless you also want to give up on the large majority of students who, like ourselves before our theses, do not yet know what they are missing. Call it forced feeding, if you wish, to require a senior thesis. To us, that is precisely the kind of forced feeding Princeton should want to continue to provide as one of the few major research universities in this country that gives so much to its undergraduates and their intellectual development.

We implore Princeton to continue "in the nation's service" as the educational flagship providing an undergraduate education of unique quality.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The writers are professors at, respectively, the Stanford Linear Accelerator Center and the Hoover Institution.

Professor Stone obviously believes the seminar is more productive and intellectual for some students than the senior thesis. I respectfully disagree. While my academic credentials proffer no positive reason why I qualify to make a statement about the pedagogy of seminars versus theses, my grades certainly speak to this matter in a negative sense. At Princeton, I enrolled in plenty of seminars. I am an expert on weak and lazy students, for I was one of those creatures. For me, the seminar was about the easiest way to blow off two or three hours in the afternoon before practice, that big party, or, most important, dinner. I remember one seminar for which I read only sixteen pages of the introduction to some treatise, rattled off a paper about the Salem witch trials, and picked up a respectable B for my trouble. Confronted by the professor with my laziness, I had no excuses, no trees to hide behind except denial. That confrontation sparked me to reconsider my academic priorities.

In my opinion, Professor Stone correctly describes the goals of the seminar, and more generally the education process, but he does the weak and lazy student an injustice by letting him escape so easily the shackles of the senior thesis. Weak and lazy students do not think for themselves. They do not evaluate evidence or criticize, except to the extent that they refer to dedicated students as "social zeros," "geeks," and worse. Weak and lazy students do not prepare "well-thought-out papers." I once got a venerable A on a paper written during lunch while I ate a steak sandwich. My weak and lazy colleagues and I joked about the grade. Scholarship is fun and writing is an art, but we did not care. My days as a weak and lazy student amaze and embarrass me, and seminars certainly did not break me of my bad habits.

Researching and drafting my senior thesis, however, interested me. At times, it felt like punishment, a penalty imposed for tricking the admission office in the first place. At other times, I developed a thirst for the truth and a desire to write well. The mandatory thesis forced me to interact with professors, to pick their brains. Even though I found the faculty uninterested in my topic, the thesis itself produced the type of intellectual interaction between professor and student that the university brags about. For the first time in my life, I endured a period of introspective and sustained discussion and analysis, producing a document of which I could be proud. Seminars never came close to simulating that excruciating belief that I had done something worthwhile.

The higher quality of education will not be advanced by giving the weak and lazy student the option not to attempt the challenge of a senior thesis. Sacrificing students like me does not solve the problem; it encourages ignorance.

James Hogue Deserves Our Sympathy

I was appalled by the mean-spirited tone of the story entitled "The Strange Case of James Arthur Hogue" in the April 3 PAW. The total lack of concern for James Hogue as a human being and the need to close the piece expressing almost explicit satisfaction at the sentence he faces—one that will almost certainly destroy his chances for rehabilitation—are not in tune with Princeton's famous institutional compassion and concern for human values.

Are you not disturbed that Mr. Hogue's punishment is likely to be about the same as that of people who have stolen billions of dollars in the junk bond and savings-and-loan industries? Has this community totally lost any residual sense of humor? Are we all so insecure that we cannot afford to give somebody who cheated us a second chance? Is it worth nothing that, while at Princeton, James Hogue was a student in good standing? Would it not be a greater accomplishment for this institution to aid in the rehabilitation of an individual like Mr. Hogue than to dump him into the already overpopulated human waste-disposal system? Let us not forget that this country has the highest rate of incarceration among all Western countries.

About a year ago, I had Mr. Hogue in my class for a term. Like everybody else, I was misled by his fake background. However, I saw this young man searching for his future profession with real determination and intelligence. In geology, he finally found the subject that could interest him and provide him with excitement and an income. I am not a psychologist, but I am sure that boredom had a lot to do with Mr. Hogue's poor decisions in the past. He was taking four courses in geology when his fraud was exposed. Hardly a likely behavior for someone who plans to be a professional cheater.

I am not excusing his behavior. I only want to stress that in any civilized society, prevention and rehabilitation should play a bigger role than vengeance and punishment.

GIACINTO SCOLES

I believe that Lawrence Stone's proposal to abolish the mandatory senior thesis is ill advised. The very way in which he frames the issues disturbs me. "How much truly valuable experience do the weaker or lazier students gain in return for all this expenditure of faculty time and trouble?" he asks. This formulation bespeaks a crudely reductive calculus, far more geared to the corporate grievances of the faculty than to the needs of Princeton undergraduates. Time and again, Stone misses the point. A seminar program, he reassures us in the economystifying idiom professors use when they want to flourish their command of reality, would "offset any loss the curriculum might suffer . . ." It is not the curriculum that would suffer the loss but the students. Nor is it the "findings" generated by the thesis that matter. In my view, Stone radically underestimates the significance of the process in his bottom-line preoccupation with the results—I mean the adventure of independent research and reflection. In writing a senior thesis, it is less the flirtation with scholarship that counts than the deepening of analytical skills that will carry over into all spheres of professional life; the expanded capacity for autonomy; and perhaps above all, the enhanced sense of self-esteem: "I did it I did it myself!" An expression of relief, to be sure, but also a buoyant sense of achievement, of creativity and application, of stretching beyond one's ordinary reach—even, I dare say, for some of the "weaker or lazier" students stigmatized by Stone's pedagogical Darwinism.

The thesis experience, more than any other in my view, is what fabricates the Princetonian. For the undertaking is not only of immense psychological consequence. It also forges a sentiment of community, a bond of common investment, and a memory of shared striving that endure and thicken over the years. Princetonians constitute a collective elite because they collectively traverse this unique itinerary of junior papers, senior theses, and senior comprehensives. To modify this system by introducing an optional thesis for those who elect to stand for honors would be to alter profoundly—and in my opinion balefully—the social structure of the undergraduate body. It would be to insinuate a sort of intellectual bicker, an invitation to exclusion the implications of which most undergraduates would not recognize until long after graduation. Honors would become the appanage of a coterie of (mostly) future graduate students (professors understandably favoring their own social reproduction). It would become a system for recompensing unusual scholarly achievement in a narrow spirit, rather than an open concourse that rewards young women and men of all ambitions who happen to perform superlatively in a more or less unselfconscious manner.

At Cornell, we use the honors program and the seminar system that Stone recommends. The honors program produces some wonderful student-scholars. But their segregation from the rest of the student body impoverishes both them and their commoner comrades. The seminar is a stimulating locus of teaching and learning, but it does not have the seismic impact that Stone envisions. Why not invite the most enterprising student's (Stone's honor guard) to take graduate seminars? We do that at Cornell, and the blend proves very tonic indeed.

Let us not deprive Princetonians of the enriching and gratifying experience of doing a thesis; let us not deprive the faculty of this opportunity for intimate and sustained dialogue with students; let us not deprive the university of this powerful instrument of cultural and social integration. The trade-off that Stone proposes is a giveaway that would seriously weaken Princeton.

Professor Stone's proposal may be worth exploring, but I would argue that the senior thesis has proved a valuable experience for most Princeton students. To restrict it to a select few would set Princeton back to what it was doing before World War I and—like most other colleges and universities—to basing its undergraduate degree entirely on an arbitrary number of course credits, with limited opportunities for independent study.

The senior thesis grew out of the Four-Course Plan, initiated in the 1920s, in which upperclass students took four courses instead of five each term, and did independent work in lieu of the fifth course. Luther P. Eisenhart, the distinguished mathematician and dean of the faculty, told me that in recommending the plan, the Committee on the Course of Study concluded that an honors program should be open to all. The intent of the plan was to place less emphasis on accumulated courses and more on concentration in a single academic field, on which students would be tested with a comprehensive examination at the end of their senior years. Later, when I served as dean of the college, I looked through the committee's minutes and found no mention of a senior thesis, only (quoting from memory) "such independently written papers as the several departments may require." Two departments—English and biology, as I recall—decided to require as independent work a long essay or thesis. The experiment proved so successful that other departments followed suit. Recently, the comprehensives have diminished in importance as proliferating fields of study have made these examinations increasingly difficult to frame, but the thesis has held its place—not, I believe, because it is traditional but because of its educational worth.

In The Educational Process, Dean Eisenhart wrote "Some will say also that many seniors are incapable of . . . writing a thesis of any intrinsic value. This is undoubtedly true. But the real question is . . . what the writing of the thesis did for the student. What satisfaction did he derive from the experience? What incentive for continuing study does it create? . . . Many students have said that it was their first experience in college in feeling that what they were doing was really their own." My nearly forty years of teaching and advising students bear this out. The large majority have looked back on the thesis as the most valuable part of their Princeton education.

James Conant, the former president of Harvard, and I once examined the programs of study on a number of campuses. Almost invariably, the major was only an accumulation of course credits, with no real opportunity for independent work; more than one professor expressed the wish that his institution require a thesis. To turn Princeton back to limiting the thesis to those who choose to go for honors would cut the majority off from an important educational experience. To do so in these days of highly selective admissions hardly seems wise.

The senior seminars that Professor Stone describes sound very good. I hope they flourish, but without displacing the thesis. In a seminar, as in a class or preceptorial, everything depends upon the quality of the students and the teaching ability of the faculty member. If the students are lively and the professor gifted and skillful, the contagion will result in a good experience for all. If not, the result can be deadly. Sometimes, there will be a gathering of students—even bright ones—that Socrates himself could not bring to life. At its best, a seminar is under the control of the professor; it is a means of carrying on instruction, and the student is not pursuing an inquiry of his own choosing in his own way. The senior thesis invites the student to do just this. I know of no other educational instrument that so readily takes the student into the fun of learning with a momentum that may carry into later life.

JEREMIAH S. FINCH h'31 h'42

Lawrence Stone's proposal to end the mandatory senior thesis is really one of the most dismaying pieces to be printed in PAW in a long time. Although professors may feel that the thesis is a burdensome amount of work for them, I can assure them that many students feel that their theses were the best part of their education, even when it turned out to be something better buried in the garbage heap than the library stacks.

It is even sadder to see that he wants to replace the thesis with seminars—an educational concept that seems to be the worst of all possible methods. In a lecture, a professor can give some structure to the ideas in a course. In a seminar, though, the professor often lets the class take its course. The discussion shifts all over the place, as the students fight to inject their two cents and garner some measure of "class participation." By the end, the students only learn the insights of the other students and pick up precious little knowledge that actually comes from the brain of the professor.

The thesis allows seniors to focus on one topic and find new avenues of approach to a subject. The skills learned are invaluable. It is an extremely rewarding undertaking, and alumni can be proud of it. Alumni have had their theses published and implemented as public policy, and their work has been the basis of further research. One thesis has even served as the blueprint of a nationwide teaching organization. How can this be replaced?

As the parents of a freshman and a recent graduate of Princeton, we would like to state our view of Professor Stone's proposal. In this age of computerized education, when the performances of students are often evaluated by computers from responses coded on optically scanned sheets, it is most refreshing that Princeton still holds to the traditional value of requiring all seniors to write theses. When helping our children select colleges, we found this to be the main reason for choosing Princeton.

Lawrence Stone Replies:

I am in entire agreement with my critics about the immense and unique value of a senior thesis for those students, perhaps two-thirds of a class, who take it seriously and try to do a good job. I thought I had made that clear in my essay. I would fiercely oppose any attempt to prevent a student who wished to do so from writing a thesis. I remain unconvinced, however, that the minority who just throw the thing together at the last minute get anything out of it.

I was told the other day—rightly or wrongly—that only six colleges and universities in the United States now impose a mandatory thesis upon all seniors. Most have a mandatory requirement for those aspiring to honors. The six hold-outs may be right, but for Princeton, the result is that it's impossible to introduce more flexibility into the undergraduate program by encouraging more seminars—for which substantial papers have to be written. Perhaps other ways could be devised to make room for more seminars.

The point of my essay was not primarily to abolish the mandatory senior thesis, but to make space for an alternate, and very promising, method of teaching. It may be that some way other than abolishing the mandatory thesis could be devised to achieve this object. The root questions are: How can the teaching resources of the faculty be employed most profitably so as to stimulate the intellectual development of Princeton students? How can we best encourage them to think more for themselves, to write more fluently and grammatically, and to handle better conflicting ideas and data? There are no easy answers to these questions. What makes Princeton unique among major research universities in the United States is the time and energy it devotes to undergraduate teaching, and any attempt to diminish that time and energy should be resisted. For many students, maybe most, the senior thesis is a revelation and a joy; but for some, it is a useless chore. That is the only argument I was making, together with a plea for a more varied teaching experience.

Drinking and Reunions

I was glad to read in the March 20 PAW that the university is at last taking a much more activist approach to alcoholism on the campus. It's one of the real blights not only of our alma mater but of virtually every college campus I have ever visited. What a waste of young, promising lives!

Carl Wartenburg makes an important point about Reunions, one that alumni should heed. We all know that there is a lot of drinking during Reunions. Indeed, sometimes I think that is the only reason some of our colleagues come back. But there are a lot of undergraduates present, and, whether we like it or not, we serve as role models for some of them—particularly the weaker willed among them, who must think, "Well, if they can get drunk, so can I."

Moderating our drinking during Reunions would be a real contribution to Princeton. In some cases more important than our financial contributions.

Mixed-Up Math

Although the news may be good, the math is certainly questionable! The article on the popularity of selective clubs (Notebook, March 20) caught my eye. To whom or what do we attribute the statement that 27 of 50 women admitted to Tiger Inn represents a higher ratio than 80 of 120 men also admitted?

Is this an attempt to convince the feminists that their legal victory overturned not only tradition, but mathematical principles as well?

Incoming Class of 1995 Sets Record As Most Selective in Princeton History

"YES!"

Dean of Admission Fred A. Hargadon's acceptance letters still begin with his patented user-friendly greeting, and 2,026 of them were mailed out April 3 to an unusually select group of successful applicants. The admission office invited a mere 15.9 percent of the applicants, a record low, to join Princeton's Class of 1995. The admission office was forced to be so selective because 12,717 candidates, also a record number, applied in a year when Princeton had a hundred fewer offers of admission to give than last year. The university usually expects about 53 percent of the offers to be accepted, but last year an unexpectedly high percentage of admittees to the Class of 1994 matriculated, precipitating a housing shortage. As in recent years, the university is aiming for a class of 1,130, but after last year's experience, admission officers are allowing for a "yield" of about 56 percent of the admittees.

The acceptance rate this spring was not only the lowest in Princeton's history, but also led the Ivy League in selectivity for the second year in a row. Princeton's recent popularity among high-school seniors has not made the admission office's task any simpler. Even if Hargadon's staff had limited its offers of admission to applicants with straight A's, Princeton would still have had to turn about seven hundred away. Hargadon cautions, however, that the popularity of colleges is cyclical, and Princeton's very selectivity may discourage future applicants.

The exact composition of the new freshman class will not be known until well after May 1, the date by which students had to respond to the offer of admission. In most respects, however, the pool of '95 admittees resembles recent classes. With 1,125 men and 901 women, a 56:44 ratio, the group offered admission to the Class of 1995 was the third in row to crack the 60:40 threshold. Once again, the university attracted equal numbers of male and female candidates for the A.B. degree, but the male-female ratio for prospective engineers was 71:29.

The proportion of minorities admitted has remained steady at about 29 percent of each class over the last few years. The admission office is tabulating applicants' responses to the optional question on race differently this year, to include a category for "mixed parentage," and as a result a racial breakdown was not available by press time. An independent source confirmed, however, that the proportions of minorities (excluding the new category) were virtually unchanged from last year. The percentage of Hispanics rose slightly to 7.7, and that of Asian-Americans fell slightly to 11.7; at 9.7 percent, the proportion of blacks was unchanged.

The decline in the number of "legacies" admitted continues. Although the rate at which children of alumni are accepted has been stable at around 46 percent—much higher than for the total applicant pool—only 389 applied, a demographic trend duplicated at other Ivy League schools. The 183 legacies accepted this spring amount to 9 percent of the admittees, the lowest figure in years.

Turkey's Özal Visits Princeton

DURING HIS VISIT to Princeton on March 28, Turgut Özal, the hard-hatted President of Turkey, discussed the Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor at the Princeton Plasma Physics Lab with Ronald W. C. The diminutive statesman also saw Firestone Library's excellent exhibit of Turkish and Ottoman books and other holdings in the Robert H. Taylor '30 Collection. Özal, a firm supporter of the anti-Iraq coalition, later addressed an overflow crowd in Dodds Auditorium on Turkey's role in the "post-Gulf Crisis world." While protesters outside condemned Turkey's human-rights record and its military presence in Cyprus, Özal praised his country's fledgling democratic politics and free-market economics as models for Eastern European and Middle Eastern countries. He got to keep the hat.

Caribbean Oceanography & Sailing Program January 26 - February 2, 1992

Beneath the hull, crystal blue waters sparkle over the coral reefs of the Virgin Islands. On deck, some of the crew hoist sails, others take water samples with marine scientists, while others study plankton samples in the lab. You can be a working crew member on board the Research Vessel Westward, a 125 foot staysail schooner operating from St. Thomas, Virgin Islands in a unique educational experience offered by Outdoor Action in cooperation with the Sea Education Association (SEA). We are repeating this unique and extremely popular program which brings Princeton alumni together with current Princeton students in a fascinating exploration of the marine world.

The program of oceanographic research focuses on specific scientific objectives relating to the Caribbean. As a participant you have an active role in all phases of the ship's research. Daily lectures and watch-standing, introduce you to basic oceanographic sampling techniques. Working hand-in-hand with the ship's crew and scientific staff you deploy and retrieve oceanographic gear, collect samples, process and analyze data and report results including taking deep water ocean samples for chemical analysis, deploying meter nets to sample plankton and marine organisms, sonar depth and topology studies, and collection and analysis of bottom sediment samples.

The sailing of the ship goes hand-in-hand with the research being conducted: accurate navigation guides Westward to a predetermined location (research station). A suitable sail configuration is selected and set to maintain a fixed position or to move the ship ahead at a certain speed. Samples are taken then a new course is set to the next station and the vessel gets underway. As crew you learn to sail by setting and striking sails, taking the helm, navigating, piloting, and monitoring the engine room. During the week you are taught all the necessary sailing skills and given increasing responsibility the daily operations of sailing this magnificent vessel.

This expedition offers a rare opportunity to experience the sea as sailors have done for generations combined with an in-depth study of basic oceanography and an opportunity for alumni to interact with current Princeton students. Keep in mind that this is a research voyage, not a charter cruise. You will be an integral part of a hard working crew. Since the vessel operates 24 hours a day, all participants will stand rotating watches and you will have an opportunity to experience all aspects of the research cruise.

The cost for the program will be $1050.00 per person which will cover all ocean expenses for the week (excluding travel costs to and from St. Thomas). You may bring children 16 and over. To register please return the enclosed registration form with a $200.00 deposit per person.

Westward is U.S. registered and is inspected and certified by the U.S. Coast Guard as a Sailing School Vessel. She is required to meet safety standards that differ from those of a passenger vessel on a comparable route. Westward meets or exceeds all safety requirements for her class.

A Political Lightning Rod

IF YOU WERE INVITED to break the deadlock in a bitter, partisan dispute over legislative redistricting, and your vote was guaranteed to provoke harsh attacks upon your character, you would probably hesitate to say yes, right? And you wouldn't even dream of doing it twice, right?

Donald E. Stokes

Meet Donald E. Stokes '51-'52. Stokes, a respected scholar of American politics and the dean of the Woodrow Wilson School, didn't know beans about how New Jersey redraws its state legislative boundaries back in 1981. That was when Robert N. Wilentz '48, the state's Chief Justice, first asked him to join the ten-member Legislative Apportionment Commission as the tie-breaking "public" member. Ten years, two reapportionments, and innumerable slings and arrows later, he has become something of an expert on the matter.

Every state must rearrange its political boundaries after the decennial census to reflect shifts in population. As with congressional redistricting, political careers hang in the balance, and both parties maneuver fiercely to maximize their representation in the state legislature. New Jersey's constitution mandates a procedure that Stokes calls "exquisitely partisan": the state chairmen of the Republican and Democratic parties each appoint five members to the commission that redraws political boundaries. "That partisan commission has a month to consider whether it can cut a deal," Stokes explains in his measured baritone. "If it can't, then a fig leaf of public interest is introduced." In 1991 as in 1981, that "fig leaf" was Stokes himself.

That Stokes, a Democrat, voted that first time for a plan favored by Democrats and condemned by the G.O.P. was less sinister than it appeared. The process does not require consensus; Stokes could have simply cast his deciding vote with either camp and gone home. Instead, he skillfully molded a consensus that, in private, included most of the Republicans. In public, however, the G.O.P. commissioners denounced the plan—and Stokes—so they wouldn't have to defend it to their party's incumbents.

To Stokes's surprise, Wilentz asked him back this spring. But this reapportionment proved far more contentious than the last. For one thing, demographic shifts over the last ten years benefited Republican areas of the state at the expense of the urban, Democratic northeast. Second, changes in the federal Voting Rights Act in 1982 required that henceforth the architects of reapportionment carve out "majority minority" districts—districts with black or Hispanic majorities—that would be more likely to elect state senators and assemblymen who are minorities. Ironically, this mandate may hurt the Democratic Party in the next elections, because it tends to concentrate minority, and therefore Democratic, voters in fewer districts. As a result of these factors, Stokes's 1991 reapportionment pitted several incumbent Democrats against each other in redrawn districts.

Democratic leaders accused Stokes of "intellectual dishonesty," of favoring Republicans this time out of a rigid, academic sense of impartiality. In fact, Stokes says he knew that Democratic losses were unavoidable, and before he devised his compromise plan, he gave Democratic leaders the opportunity to figure out where they preferred the axe to fall. The Democratic Party holds slim majorities in the assembly and senate, with elections scheduled for next November.

Stokes relished his role as a lightning rod for partisan rancor. "That," he says, "is what the public member is there for." Yet there's something about Stokes's return engagement that is reminiscent of Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton's second marriage: masochistic and perhaps indulgent, and yet entirely forgivable, because it demonstrates an admirable faith in the outcome. Stokes still believes in New Jersey's ugly-duckling reapportionment process. "Democratic constitutions ought to have some resiliency," he muses. "However odd the procedure was this year, it proved it was quite resilient." Stokes doubts he will do it again. Yet in public service, as in romance, perhaps one does not always have a choice. "When a Chief Justice asks you to do something like this," Stokes says, "you can't say no. As usual, I just did what I was told."

Lawrence complexes will be open to unmarried graduate students and their partners, who may not be students, "when cohabitation with a non-graduate student is beneficial, in a non-financial sense, to the graduate student."

Although it does not explicitly mention homosexual couples, the new plan is a direct result of criticism by gay graduate students that, by providing multi-bedroom housing to married heterosexuals but not to homosexual couples, Princeton violates its own equal-opportunity policy. This policy states, in part, that "the university is committed to the principle of not discriminating against individuals on the basis of personal beliefs or characteristics such as . . . sexual orientation." This change is the first official result of the university's ongoing reassessment of its definition of "derivative membership" in the university community, a phrase that commonly refers to spouses and dependents of students and members of the faculty and staff. In the future, privileges and benefits now enjoyed by the spouses of graduate students may be extended to the partners of gay and unmarried heterosexual graduate students—and possibly to such partners of the faculty and staff.

The new policy has so far been marked by confusion and controversy. When President Shapiro first announced it in a memo of March 4, many graduate students criticized it sharply, charging that the criterion for eligibility was too broad and would stretch the limited pool of multi-occupancy housing even thinner. In the memo, Shapiro stated that eligibility for multi-occupancy apartments would be extended to graduate students and their partners who "have certified that, although not married to one another, they wish to occupy university housing and that the graduate student is willing to assume responsibility for all of their financial obligations to the university."

After graduate students complained that virtually anyone could qualify under this wording, Provost Paul Benacerraf '52 '60 issued a "clarification" stating that the applicants would have to certify that the nature of their relationship justified family housing. These certification forms were to be evaluated by the dean of the Graduate School's office.

The policy seems to have been adopted so suddenly that these certification forms were not available until the day housing applications were due, a delay that probably depressed the number of applicants. Twenty-five couples ineligible under the old rules entered the draw: twenty-one were heterosexual, three were gay, and one was a student who claimed his mother as a dependent. The certification form does not ask applicants to sign a statement of emotional commitment to each other, or to demonstrate that the relationship should be considered comparable to marriage. According to Thomas H. Wright, Jr. '62, a vice-president of the university, "Many people felt that that was getting into personal lives. Emotional ties and connections—that wasn't the kind of inquiry that the university should be involved in."

The university provides housing for about 70 percent of its 1,700 graduate students, allocating the units according to a system that gives preference to first- and second-year students. The most desirable apartments are those with two or more bedrooms in the Butler and Lawrence complexes. The housing office divides these units between students with spouses or dependents and single students drawing in groups like undergraduates.

Since 1987, unmarried couples have been permitted to draw into the multi-occupancy dwellings if both partners are graduate students. Graduate students can also live with non-graduate students in the one-bedroom Millstone apartments.

Last spring, however, Michael Costa, a graduate student in the molecular biology department, applied for married housing with his boyfriend on the grounds that the university's equal-opportunity policy required that committed homosexual couples be given the same rights and benefits as married couples. Like most states, New Jersey does not recognize homosexual marriages; it was on this basis that the university had denied married housing to them. After unsuccessful negotiations between Costa and the housing department, the matter was referred to the university's Ad Hoc Committee on Gay, Lesbian, and Bi-sexual Needs and Concerns, chaired by Carl Wartenburg, the assistant to the president. That committee recommended last May that the university "make available to the domestic partners of lesbian and gay employees and graduate students the same benefits now granted to the spouses of heterosexual employees and graduate students," including family housing, health benefits, and university ID cards. In September, President Shapiro charged Provost Benacerraf with forming a committee to judge the feasibility of the ad hoc committee's recommendations.

Benacerraf's report to Shapiro in December was forthright in its support of the gay students' position. It concluded that, even though the university had adhered to the letter of its equal-opportunity policy, discrimination against homosexuals was in fact taking place. The report recommended that Princeton replace the concept of "spouse" with "domestic partner," and explicitly endorsed the principle of granting the rights now enjoyed by married couples to "same-sex couples whose members exhibit to one another a level of commitment comparable to what is demonstrated in marriage." Attached to the report were proposed "affidavits of domestic partnership" drafted by Howard S. Ende, the university's general counsel. The report took no firm stand on whether the definition of "domestic partnership" should include unmarried heterosexual couples.

With the exception of graduate housing, the university has so far declined to follow the lead of Benacerraf's recommendations. In all his statements on the new housing policy, Shapiro has avoided mentioning "domestic partners," and has hardly acknowledged that the change in policy had its genesis in the homosexual community. Benacerraf admits that his report is trolling unfamiliar waters. "No institution, to my knowledge," Benacerraf says, "has done a thoroughgoing job of trying to base the benefits they offer on the concept of domestic partnerships, as opposed to the concept of marriage or legal dependents."

Shapiro has stated that such a revision of the university's housing policy is still an open question. The future of Benacerraf's other recommendations is even less clear, especially because he is due to step down as provost on July 15. Costa and other gay graduate students fear that the report will not be acted upon. "I think it's already disappeared without a trace," Costa says. "As far as I know, no one is working on those recommendations." Benacerraf, however, says that Shapiro has promised to give a formal response to the recommendations of Wartenburg's committee. Both Benacerraf and Shapiro have implied that the administration will take cost into account when it considers extending benefits beyond family housing.

Perhaps the costliest undertaking for the university would be the provision of health insurance, which is now available to graduate students and their spouses. In particular, the prospect of granting health coverage to non-students who may have a higher risk of developing AIDS, for example, undoubtedly discomfited Princeton's financial planners. In Benacerraf's view, however, the crux of the controversy is the principle of "domestic partnership," not cost. "The most controversial thing would be the recog-

Alumni Council Plans New and Improved P-rade Route

FIRST, THE BAD NEWS: another Princeton tradition has been altered. Starting this year, the P-rade will follow a radically different route, shunning Prospect Avenue and Clarke Field in favor of a straight run down Elm Drive to Poe Field. Now the good news: the new route is probably an improvement, and the "traditional" course isn't that old anyway.

The Alumni Council's executive committee approved the change on January 26, after a couple of years of discussion among Alumni Council committees, university staffers, and alumni. Thanks to the increase in P-rade participants, from about 6,100 alumni and relatives twenty-five years ago to more than 9,000 last year, the P-rade has become longer—nearly three hours when it doesn't rain—and more difficult to manage. Large gaps frequently appear between classes. As a result, many marchers break off from the procession before they reach the president's reviewing stand, and few stay for the meeting of the Alumni Association.

The P-rade's current route has never been ideal: only the stretch along Prospect Avenue is suitable for spectators. The increase in marchers, particularly those in strollers, has made the bottlenecks at 1879 Arch and Roper Lane more apparent. "The critical problem is the gapping that occurs when you don't have proper staging areas," says Daniel N. White '65, the director of the Alumni Council. "It becomes cumbersome to get classes to fall in."

The new route, which the Alumni Council publicized in a previous issue of PAW, traces a "P" through the heart of the campus. Classes will march east past Nassau Hall and through East Pyne Arch, double back to the south of Cannon Green until they reach Elm Drive, and follow Elm Drive south, past Edwards and Dodd halls and Dillon Gym, to grandstands on Poe Field. At Poe, the Alumni Council plans to stage a finale with refreshment stands, children's rides, and a new ceremony welcoming the senior class to the ranks of alumni. The new route is 15 percent shorter than the old one, has no bottlenecks, and provides ample room for spectators.

This new course is but the latest stage in the long evolution of the P-rade, which first took place in 1906 as a means of leading alumni to the annual varsity baseball game against Yale in an orderly fashion. With the building of the Engineering Quadrangle on University Field in the early sixties, the game and the P-rade's terminus moved to Clarke Field. In 1967, an alumni game replaced the varsity contest, which had been discontinued at Yale's request. The next year, the funeral train of Senator Robert F. Kennedy, who had been assassinated a few days earlier, was due to pass through Princeton Junction the day of the P-rade. In a gesture of respect, the game was canceled and the march took a revised, on-campus route. "That," says

White, "seemed to open a Pandora's box," as organizers experimented in the following years with various terminal points, including Poe Field. In 1975, Clarke Field again became the terminus.

In a related development, the Class of 1991 has dropped a couple of senior-class customs. Class officers have decreed that beer jackets will be known as "senior jackets" in deference to seniors uncomfortable with the jacket's alcoholic connotation. The officers have also abandoned the pipe ceremony on Class Day. Traditionally, the senior class has imported clay pipes, which students smoke and then throw en masse at the cannon on Cannon Green in the hope of earning a lifetime of good luck. The decision was mainly financial, in that the pipes cost more than $3,000, but they will probably not be missed: most students never know of the ceremony until Class Day.

Major Exhibition of Minor White

FIFTEEN YEARS after Minor White died, leaving his personal archive of 25,000 images and documents to Princeton, this noted photographer is the subject of a major exhibition at the Art Museum. Organized and curated by Peter C. Bunnell, the McAlpin Professor of the History of Photography and Modern Art, "Minor White: The Eye That Shapes" opened two years ago at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. Since then, the exhibit has traveled around the country; Princeton is its last stop. White, who was born in Minneapolis in 1908, was artist, educator, and editor: he taught at M.I.T. and other schools, cofounded the photography journal Aperture, and edited it for more than twenty years. But he is chiefly known for his photographs, which are often intensely personal and spiritual. He shot landscapes that resemble those of Ansel Adams in their stark beauty, and still lifes that drew on the abstract and surreal trends of modern art. According to Bunnell, who wrote the exhibition's profusely illustrated catalogue, White's later photographs "reveal the life of the visitor in less worldly realms"—a good description of Vicinity of Dansville, New York (1955), reproduced here. The exhibit runs through June 16. □

"Freshman" or "First-Year Student"? Princeton Watches Its Language

MORE THAN twenty years after the first women matriculated at Princeton, coeducation is still making progress. Admitting women as students was just the first step in a process of inclusion that manifests itself nowadays in the very vocabulary of the academy. And changing the words of "Old Nassau" in 1987 to reflect Princeton's coeducational status was but the start of a campaign for more gender-inclusive language on the campus. Today, through the efforts of various student and administrative groups, members of the Class of '94 are generally referred to as "first-year students" rather than "freshmen." "Freshman Week" has become "Orientation Week." And the head of an academic department is now called a "chair," not a "chairman."

Some students, professors, and administrators consider such linguistic refinements to be unthinking acts of "political correctness," but for many others they are long-overdue reforms that reflect the growing diversity of the Princeton community. At the heart of the controversy is a more fundamental debate about language: Is "freshman" one of many words used without reference to their gender-specificity, or are these words actually responsible for shaping perceptions—perhaps in discriminatory ways? Do we speak language, or does language speak us?

Gender-specific words aren't the only ones to come under attack. Another term that's drawn complaints is "master," what the university calls the professors who head the five residential colleges for underclass students. Members of the Campus Climate Subcommittee of the Standing Committee on the Status of Women recently sent a letter to Vice-Provost Janet McKay '74, arguing that "master" is inappropriate because of its racist and sexist connotations. Authored by Jan Bretz-Seyler, a secretary in the development office, and Janis Strout, the director of the Women's Center, the letter recommends finding a replacement for "master" and, in turn, reexamining the post itself.

According to Bretz-Seyler and Strout, "master" is "offensive in that it refers either to slavery or to the patriarchal family system (e.g. one's husband is one's Lord and Master, etc.)." Ultimately, they argue, the term "reinforces a hierarchical system that perpetrates domination of one group or sex over another." The authors conclude: "Given the university's desire to facilitate a diverse and inclusive community, especially where undergraduates spend the majority of their time living and learning, we believe the term 'master' is antithetical to this goal."

Although these objections to "master" may seem new, they are really part of a continuing effort to make the language of the residential colleges more inclusive, says Associate Dean of the Chapel Sue Anne Steffey Morrow. In the fall of 1981, before the system of colleges was formed, Steffey Morrow and several other deans and campus ministers rejected "master" as an "unacceptable and difficult term."

"When we name something, we define it," Steffey Morrow says. "'Master' seemed anachronistic. It also seemed to me to be a sexist term." She offers "mentor" as an alternative, both because it maintains the meaning of "teacher" or "leader" and because it sounds like "master."

But Nancy Weiss Malkiel, the dean of the college and a history professor, points out that "master" is also a traditional academic title whose history extends back to the medieval university. In light of this current critique of "master," she says, other traditional academic terms, such as "master's degree" and "bachelor's degree," could encounter the same kinds of reproach. In her view, changing the vocabulary "may be the most ubiquitous or convenient approach" to making Princeton fully coeducational and fully supportive of women, but such reform is not "the most meaningful."

According to Erica Fox '91, however, "language is not incidental to perceptions. It seems to me very clear that language constructs reality." Fox, who co-won the Pyne Prize this year, says she objects to "master" because historically it has meant someone with a "socially constructed mandate to do violence."

In contrast to the controversy over "master," the adoption of "first-year student" and "chair" has met little resistance. Last spring, the Undergraduate Student Government unanimously passed a resolution calling for a switch to gender-inclusive terms, and President Shapiro recommended that department heads officially adopt the title "chair." In addition, the student government is considering amending the Honor Code so that its language is not male-oriented.

Shapiro refused to order the use of "first-year student," but most student publications have made this phrase part of their official style. "The Prince has tried to be as inclusive as possible," says Paul Lim '92, the editor-in-chief of The Daily Princetonian. Alexandra Bradner '91, Lim's predecessor as editor, says that although "first-year student" can cause ambiguities in sports stories, sportswriters have, where possible, replaced gender-specific labels like "defenseman" with the more inclusive "defense player."

"I think 'first-year student' is clumsy and ungainly," says Ruth Shalit '92, the editor-in-chief of The Princeton Sentinel. The Sentinel, a semimonthly newspaper with a conservative bent, recently ran an article satirizing the switch to gender-inclusive terminology. "My attitude as a feminist is that you have to pick your battles," Shalit adds. "This is not an issue that motivates me to righteous wrath."

According to Justin Harmon '78, the university's director of communications and publications, there is as yet no consensus on the official use of "first-year student." But Harmon, whose office issues the Princeton Weekly Bulletin (an in-house newspaper), Princeton Today (a tabloid sent to all alumni), and the undergraduate and graduate catalogues, says that his staff now uses the term "chair" and tries to avoid "he" if there isn't a specifically male antecedent.

"First-year student" seems to have gained currency this year among undergraduates, and in the long run, it may find an easier official reception because it's already used to describe "freshman" graduate students. But as long as the word "master" still evokes "slave," Princeton will continue to watch its language.

Challenging Times

Earlier this spring I told a Princeton Today audience that I thought this past year had been a very good one for Princeton, but a very difficult one for higher education. A series of unconnected events has eroded confidence in the vision and role of the nation's universities, in their integrity, and in their capacity both to manage their affairs properly and to continue faithfully to serve the nation's interests. These events include:

- Allegations that universities may be charging certain expenditures to federally sponsored research projects that are either not allowed or represent an inappropriate use of taxpayer dollars.
- The retraction of a scientific paper by a distinguished biologist who for three years and through several Congressional hearings had staunchly defended the paper against charges that it was based on fabricated data and who often seemed to believe that scientists were "above" questioning.
- Developments on several campuses that seem to suggest that students and faculty are required to subscribe to a "politically correct" orthodoxy. In the service of demystifying important aspects of our culture, this orthodoxy is thought to reject many of the foundations of rational discourse, open debate, and other valued aspects of western civilization and to do so in an atmosphere of intellectual intimidation.
- An ongoing antitrust investigation by the Department of Justice into the ways in which more than 50 colleges and universities determine tuitions, salaries, and financial aid.
- New legislation that requires colleges and universities to report the graduation rates of their athletes and the incidence of campus crime. Ironically, the initiative by university presidents to institute long overdue reforms seems to have increased awareness of the widespread abuses in intercollegiate athletics.
- Cost and tuition increases that continue to exceed the rate of growth of family income.
- Allegations from many quarters that faculty members do not teach enough, or well enough, because their primary loyalties are to research or to income-producing activities outside of the classroom.
- A growing disjuncture between the perceptions of university-based scientists that support for their work is declining and the fact that federal support for university-based research has risen sharply in the last decade.
- A growing sense that universities have become "just another corporation" and, therefore, should no longer receive special treatment (e.g., tax exempt status).

Many of these events jeopardize the hard-won independence of university faculties. Among other things, they create an unfortunate impression of a very troubling sense of privilege that fails to hold us to our responsibilities and may even suggest that we at universities are exempt from accountability. I believe there is at least some validity to these concerns, and we need to acknowledge that in some cases we need to do a better job meeting our various responsibilities.

At the same time, however, significant positive steps have been taken in many of these areas. Moreover, we need to be sure that in correcting legitimate deficiencies we do not damage these institutions in ways that undermine their essential strengths, contributions, and commitments. The United States still has the best system of higher education in the world, and it is related in crucial ways to other important national activities. These relationships with other sectors of the society, as well as the complex and intricate nature of higher education itself, represent a delicate ecology, and the country would not be served by destroying the balance of what is—on the whole—a very valuable set of cultural arrangements.

Harold T. Shapiro

I would like to comment briefly on each of the areas of current concern and then offer a few comments about where we go from here.

RESEARCH COSTS

Since World War II, American leadership and vitality in science and technology have been sustained in part through substantial public investment in university-based research. This investment has reaped many dividends, measured both in terms of new discoveries and economic growth and in terms of students who have become the scientists, engineers, researchers, and teachers of succeeding generations.

This particular relationship between the universities and the federal government has been governed by certain fundamental principles. One is that the government will fairly reimburse universities for the costs associated with federally sponsored research rather than putting the burden of these research costs on tuition revenues, state appropriations, or other revenue streams. Another is that universities will seek recovery only for costs that are allowable, fairly attributable to research, and appropriate for reimbursement from public funds.

The costs of research include "direct costs" that can be easily assigned to specific projects, and "indirect costs" that, while just as real, are more difficult to allocate precisely to particular projects. The "assignment problem" arises both out of the nature of certain expenses and the critical fact that the university tries hard to produce education and research together. Our aim is to help the nation reap the great dividends that can be attained by intertwining these efforts. Examples of indirect costs include expenditures for the buildings in which research and teaching are conducted together (including depreciation and utilities), overall campus security and safety, library resources, and central and departmental administration.

The genuine difficulty of allocating indirect costs to thousands of university projects means that there are bound to be differences of opinion, errors of accounting, and even occasional errors of judgment. In most cases these situations are successfully resolved through tough but reasonable negotiation with government auditors.

Periodically, however, a more thorough review is helpful, and recent events have reminded us of the need for persistent vigilance. It is important that the nation's universities pledge their renewed and concerted efforts to be sure that all costs charged to government-sponsored projects meet the dual tests of being allowable under federal regulations and appropriate for the expenditure of public funds. Three years ago the research universities developed proposals that would make the complex process of accounting for joint costs simpler to understand and administer. These proposals have been under discussion with federal officials for some time. My hope is that the current concerns will lead to better university management as well as to a reaffirmation of the principles of fair and full support for the genuine costs of research. These principles have been an important foundation of the quality of our national efforts in research, the preeminence of American universities, and the capacity of our country to sustain a position of economic and cultural leadership in the decades ahead.

Finally, we need to confront the simple fact that the costs of contemporary scholarship are rising quickly. If, for example, we wish to sustain leadership in science and technology, we must demonstrate a national willingness to support the necessary costs. On the other hand, we need to recognize that the rising level of resources required to support each investigator inevitably leads to the question of how quickly the number of university-based investigators needs to be expanded. It is the failure to discuss both sides of the issue that accounts for the different perceptions of scientists and federal agencies on the adequacy of research funding.

SCIENTIFIC INTEGRITY

While there is always cause for concern when established scientific practices and procedures are violated (as they were, for example, in the now infamous "cold fusion" announcements), what is perhaps most troubling about some of the current cases is the unwillingness of some university-based scientists to examine seriously the allegations of mistakes or misconduct. Nothing undermines public confidence or damages science more than actions that suggest that scientists (or anyone else, for that matter) are not accountable to others. Whether public or private, universities operate as public trusts, and the public is entitled to expect that universities will enact workable procedures—as many have—to conduct honest investigations when necessary, to protect those who come forward with information, and to take action when action is required.

The goals in this area seem clear: to avoid intrusive procedures that could seriously interfere with appropriate creativity, collegiality, and candor; to avoid regulation that is unnecessarily costly and time-consuming; but to recognize that we are accountable, as individuals and as institutions, not only for public funds, but for the public trust that is placed in us.

POLITICALLY CORRECT

Many Americans seem to believe that universities in recent years have been deciding whether to continue to expose students to the "traditional canon" of Western literature and ideas or to substitute a new set of values and approaches, including the voices of women, minorities, and non-Western authors that traditionally have not been well represented on our campuses. In fact, the question is seldom "either/or." Most universities continue the long practice of allowing the curriculum to evolve dynamically and remain strongly committed to the most sustaining traditions of our culture and to our need to understand better both the nature of our own culture as well as other cultures and ideas that have shaped our civilization.

While strengthening many traditional approaches to learning, most universities have sought to develop environments where new ideas can be nurtured and examined, where traditionally excluded groups can participate fully and where all members of the community can appreciate their commonalities while learning from their differences. On some campuses measures have been adopted or proposed in support of these goals that have appeared to infringe on such a fundamental university tenet as freedom of speech. In almost all such cases, the institutions themselves have taken corrective action. More important, I believe a strong consensus has emerged on campuses all across the country that, particularly in a diverse and pluralistic society, universities have a special responsibility to resist orthodoxies of all kinds and to encourage the expression and examination of a wide range of views. Still, surely this is an area where we can never afford to be complacent.

ANTITRUST

The antitrust investigation has now been going on for almost two years, with no clear indication of exactly what is at issue and with no end in sight. Universities have said that they do not, and do not wish to, collaborate in determining tuitions or salaries. The concern is not that this investigation will codify that position, but that it could undermine the general commitment to openness and appropriate information exchange that has long characterized the best American universities—public and private—or that it could interfere with the many highly productive and appropriate ways in which universities do cooperate (on academic programs, on shared equipment and library resources, and so on).

With respect to student aid, universities have questioned the applicability of antitrust law to decisions that essentially allocate charitable dollars to provide needy students with a further discount below an already subsidized price. Whatever the lawyers may decide, at the level of policy I believe we have a powerful national interest in encouraging universities to expend their financial aid dollars by spreading them over as many needy students—and meeting as much of their need—as possible. This is, of course, the same principle that governs the distribution of federal aid.

This investigation already has diverted substantial sums of money from educational programs to lawyers and other costs of compliance. As long as it remains unresolved, it contributes to public anxiety and suspicion about tuition levels and student aid. I hope we can reach resolution soon, without damaging either the quality of our universities or their commitments to need-based aid.

OTHER ISSUES

Intercollegiate athletics is an area where a number of reforms have recently been enacted. Clearly there is more to be done, but the trend is in an encouraging direction. Similarly, there is general acceptance that universities have an obligation not only to attend to concerns about safety but to provide the public with appropriate information. With respect to tuitions, many universities, like Princeton, have been seeking to control costs, to moderate the rate of increase in student fees, and to provide ever-increasing amounts of financial aid. In the current year, this has been quite difficult for many state-supported universities as state support has declined substantially. Finally, there has been renewed attention on many campuses to the importance of teaching undergraduates, to the preparation of graduate students as teachers (we have just instituted an exciting new program for graduate student teachers at Princeton), and to the recognition of excellent teaching by the faculty. We will present the first of our new teaching awards at Opening Exercises next fall.

WHERE WE GO FROM HERE

It is critical for universities to behave in a way that sustains public trust. If at times we fall short, it is appropriate to acknowledge our shortcomings and to take corrective action. It is equally important, however, that in addressing legitimate concerns—at our own initiative or in response to others—we do not undermine broader and equally important national purposes. It is important also that we be sensitive to preserving the conditions necessary to sustain the quality of our universities and to benefit from the great dividends that our system of higher education can continue to generate.

At the heart of many of these matters are the issues of cost, burden sharing, value received, and the distribution of benefits. On these critical matters, there is widespread disagreement. However we decide to share the future benefits and burdens of society's investment in research, development, and scholarship, we should not make the error of opting for lower quality. This would be a hoax on the next generation—our children and grandchildren. It has always been a puzzle to me why many seem to resent the drive for quality in higher education. When I talk with alumni, I occasionally ask what they would do if they needed an excellent surgeon or lawyer. Would they look for the lowest bidder or would they be willing to pay the costs of quality? The answer is invariably the latter. I don't want to overstate the comparison, but in higher education and in research and development, too, quality is expensive. The real question concerns how society shares the costs and the benefits.

For the last 45 years, the costs of quality have been shared among several partners. At private universities like Princeton, these partners include students and families who pay tuition; alumni, through annual gifts and the earnings on contributions to the endowment; corporations and foundations; and the federal government, through its student aid programs and its reimbursement for the costs—direct and indirect—of sponsored research. Public institutions include each of these partners (although students pay a much smaller share) plus the taxpayers of the state in which they are located.

In my view, each of these partners is well served by its investment. Undoubtedly each would like to pay less for what it gets, and certainly all the partners can benefit from our commitment to improve management, to control costs, and to enact efficiencies wherever possible. But at some point we have to pay the price of quality and each partner has to pay its share, unless we are prepared to cede the position of leadership in higher education that has served this country so well.

In the last half century America's colleges and universities have come to play a critical and complex role in many aspects of our national life. This role—serving both society's current interests and its need for new options—inevitably produces tensions. These tensions, however, often are a sign of health, a sign that universities are playing an important role in education, discovery and the development of new approaches. While we must try to ensure that these institutions make the best possible use of the resources entrusted to them, we must also ensure that they have the support and the independence they need to fulfill their role as society's agent in developing options for a better future.

BRILLIANT ENIGMA

*Physicist-Philosopher
Peter Putnam '46 60 Inspired a Fervent Following, Presented Princeton an Abundance of Art, and Lived His Last Years as a Janitor

By Ann Waldron

PETER ANDREWS PUTNAM '46 '60 WROTE A brilliant senior thesis in the physics department... worked for an electronics company and gave a block of its stock to Princeton to fund a peerless collection of outdoor sculpture... earned a Ph.D. at Princeton and taught the philosophy of science and religion at Union Theological Seminary, where he inspired devoted disciples... wrote prodigiously, but published rarely, on every subject under the sun, seeking primarily to unify moral law and natural law... and died in 1987 while working as a night janitor in Houma, Louisiana.

But except for the barest outline, Putnam's life is "veiled," in the words of his lifelong friend and mentor, John Archibald Wheeler, the Joseph Henry Professor of Physics, Emeritus, a world-class physicist, and the man who coined the term "black hole."

This much is known about Putnam. He was born on May 20, 1927, in Cleveland, Ohio, the son of John B. Putnam, a prominent lawyer whose wife, Mildred Andrews Putnam, collected art and was a generous donor to the Cleveland Museum of Art. She bought Impressionist paintings, owned a figurine by Edgar Degas and a rabbit by Marc Chagall, and purchased works by Alexander Calder and Joan Miró before these artists were famous. Louise Nevelson did a sculpture for her garden. She saw the work of Isamu Noguchi in Japan and commissioned a piece from him for the Cleveland museum.

Peter Putnam is said to have graduated from the University School in Cleveland in 1942, but the prep school's alumni office has no record of his having matriculated. In any event, he was admitted to Princeton as a member of the Class of 1946. Because he was only sixteen years old, he stayed in Cleveland for a postgraduate year at the Case School, which later became Case Western Reserve University. In 1943, he joined the Navy, and three years later, he finally matriculated at Princeton, as a junior because the university gave him credit for the year at Case and his service in the Navy. He graduated in 1948.

The few people who remember Putnam from his undergraduate days say he was something of a recluse. John Wheeler says he was tall, good looking, charming, and very bright. He took an English class with the literary critic R. P. Blackmur, a man he admired for the rest of his life. He majored in physics, and wrote a thesis that Wheeler still remembers. "It was so puzzling in its philosophical approach that I was at a total loss on how to mark it," Wheeler recalls. "After consulting my colleagues, I finally graded it in proportion to his course marks."

Because Putnam's family wanted him to be a lawyer, he enrolled at Yale Law School. But he was more interested in the work of Sir Arthur Eddington (1882-1944). Eddington was a brilliant English astronomer, physicist, mathematician, and pioneer in the field of cosmology. His research extended from the theory of relativity to the evolution, motion, and composition of stars, and he also wrote on the philosophy of science. His book The Nature of the Physical World (1928), which maintained that the world's meanings could not be discovered from science but must be sought in an apprehension of spiritual reality, captured Putnam's attention while he was still at Princeton. Under the growing influence of Eddington, Putnam left Yale after two years and went to work for an electronics firm three days a week, an arrangement that gave him time to wrestle with Eddington's ideas. Wheeler remembers that, about this time, Putnam refused his mother's gift of a Cadillac convertible. "He didn't like the trappings of wealth," Wheeler says. "He wore an old overcoat."

The electronics company, Sanders and Associates, paid him more than he needed to live on, and he sent the surplus to Princeton. When Sanders gave him a wad of stock, Putnam turned it over to Princeton, too, telling the university to hold on to it. By 1970, when he told Princeton to sell the stock, it was worth $1 million. That was what paid for the campus's John B. Putnam, Jr. '45, Memorial Collection of twenty sculptures by such noted artists as Pablo Picasso, Jacques Lipchitz, Henry Moore, Gaston Lachaise, Tony Smith, Nevelson, Calder, and Noguchi. John Putnam, Peter's older brother, had left Princeton at the end of his sophomore year to enlist in the Army Air Corps. A fighter pilot with a Thunderbolt squadron in England, he flew some fifty missions, and on D-Day, June 6, 1944, saw nine hours of combat over the Normandy beaches. Six weeks later, he died in the crash of a bomber in which he was flying as a passenger.

PUTNAM FELT GUILTY THAT HE WAS STILL ALIVE WHILE his brother was dead. At first, he wanted to give Princeton a building for theoretical physics that would honor Wheeler as well as memorialize his brother. Then he decided that great art would be his brother's best memorial. Putnam believed that sculpture was modern art's most exciting medium and stipulated that the funds be used to acquire primarily large, important works by the great masters of contemporary sculpture. He knew enough to call in experts to decide which sculptures fulfilled his stipulation. The selection committee included P. Joseph Kelleher '47, then the director of the University Art Museum; William M. Milliken '11, the director from 1930 to 1958 of the Cleveland Museum of Art; Thomas P. F. Hoving '53 '60, then the director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; and Alfred H. Barr, Jr. '22 '23, of New York's Museum of Modern Art.

In 1956, Putnam decided to return to Princeton to study for a graduate degree in physics. Because Wheeler, his mentor, was to be a visiting professor at the University of Leiden, in the Netherlands, that year, Putnam went with him (as did several other Princetonians). In Leiden, Putnam became close to the Wheeler family; in fact, Wheeler's wife Janette told their daughter Alison that she should turn to Putnam for help if anything happened to them.

Opposite: The brothers Putnam. At left, the enigmatic Peter Putnam, donor of Princeton's extensive collection of outdoor sculpture, and at right, his brother John, for whom the collection is named.

"Only two or three times in my life have I met thinkers with insights so far reaching, a breadth of vision so great, and a mind so keen as Putnam's."

Alison Wheeler Lahnston, now a fundraiser at Harvard, remembers Putnam with vast affection and admiration: "He was a recluse, but a man who cared passionately about ideas. He was warm and generous. I was sick in Leiden and living in a hotel room with no windows. He filled it with all kinds of flowers. He was interested in things that nobody else was interested in at the time—he adored the music of Jelly Roll Morton, for instance."

John Wheeler recalls that Putnam, although reclusive, had a knack for making friends with off-beat people. "We were celebrating my daughter's birthday in a restaurant in Leiden," he says. "Peter brought along this wonderful eighty-five-year-old woman. Her name was Nieuwenhuizen. She had grown up in Russia, where her father had been a general in the Czar's army. She had known the Czar personally, and when she had studied in Zürich, she'd known Lenin—and Einstein. She married a Dutch archaeologist, and the Kaiser, after he was interned in the Netherlands following World War I, used to invite them to Sunday dinner. And while we were in Leiden, Peter called on the widow of Ehrenfest, a physicist and friend of Einstein's who had killed himself in 1933."

It was in Leiden that Putnam came to terms with his sexuality. According to Wheeler, someone made a homosexual advance toward Putnam, and he decided to accept that he was homosexual. After he wrote to his mother about the matter, she made a special trip to Leiden to talk to him, but eventually she accepted his homosexuality.

In 1957, Putnam returned to Princeton to continue his graduate work. His dissertation explored the relationship between mass, radiation, and gravity in stars. "It was a valuable piece of work," Wheeler says. "Only two or three times in my life have I met thinkers with insights so far reaching, a breadth of vision so great, and a mind so keen as Putnam's."

Another graduate student in the physics department in those days was Robert W. Fuller '61, who later became the president of Oberlin College. Although Fuller saw Putnam as "a solitary fellow," they became friends. Fuller recalls once asking Putnam what his research involved. Putnam replied, "Do you really want to know?" Fuller answered in the affirmative—a response, he asserts, that changed his life. Putnam immediately "launched into a discourse on the relationship between scientific and moral law. He argued that they weren't really separate bodies of law—the one causal, the other ethical—but could be brought together consistently into a single unified framework based on an understanding of how the mind works. Our conversation lasted all that day, and similar intense discussions on philosophy, science, and politics went on for ten years." Fuller calls it the "most important learning of my life." Putnam "worked without breaks, and with a passion and dedication unsurpassed by anyone, student or professor."

IN 1960, AFTER HE COMPLETED HIS PH.D., PUTNAM taught at a school on Long Island and then joined the physics and astronomy department at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Fuller, then teaching at Columbia University, would take his family to Amherst for the summer so he could work with Putnam. When Putnam left the university after several years, Fuller arranged for him to have an office at Barnard College, just across Broadway from Fuller's office at Columbia.

Fuller emphasizes that although he and Putnam spoke of themselves as collaborators, their relationship was really one of apprentice and mentor. "I had the sense from the very beginning, and throughout those early years, that what Putnam was doing was of the very highest importance, and I retain that feeling to this day," Fuller says. "It was a source of frustration to me that he showed little interest in seeing his work into publication, and I tried repeatedly to persuade him to put time and energy into this. But he always preferred to go on to the next set of discoveries. And in doing so, perhaps he was right. He did his job incomparably."

Fuller gave colloquia on Putnam's theories at several universities—Princeton, Columbia, Harvard, Ohio, SUNY-Stony Brook, and Penn State—but says he never felt satisfied with his attempts to communicate Putnam's work. During their years together, Putnam (with Fuller as coauthor) published just two papers bearing his name: "On the Origin of Order in Behavior" and "Causal and Moral Law: Their Relationship as Examined in Terms of a Model of the Brain." John Wheeler believes the latter is the most important statement of Putnam's work. He sums it up with care:

"Loop" was the central idea in Putnam's picture. Excitation runs out on one branch of the loop, comes back on the other branch as response from the point of action. On return, this excitation enhances or inhibits the chemical pathway between one memory element and another. In more technical language, it enhances or inhibits the synapse that links one neuron to another. Depending upon the feedback received—burn on finger, pleasant taste on tongue, or call in ear—a complex learning process goes on. Putnam spelled out this process in terms of long sequences of inhibitions and enhancements played out almost like the notes of a piano. These "notes," these chemical acts of enhancement of this synapse, inhibition of that one, build the magic web of learning and memory. . . .

"Although Putnam helped me with these papers and proofread every draft, I do not think they do justice to his thought," Fuller says. "And they do not begin to represent what his thought had developed into by the time of his death."

Through Fuller's influence, Putnam was engaged to teach one summer at Columbia. Students and professors from Union Theological Seminary attended his courses, and because of their enthusiasm, Union hired him in 1965. He taught two courses. One, "Contemporary Science and the Philosophy of Religion," was described in the seminary's course catalogue as developing a "basic computer-oriented, self-model building approach to the overall functional operation of the brain," with implications for the "foundations of mathematics and its relations to Western philosophic traditions, especially Kant and Hegel." The other course, "Human Thought and Human Values," applied Putnam's model to "practical politics (Apter), history (Hegel, Spengler, Toynbee), psychology (Freud, Jung, Adler), aesthetics and mystical experience (St. John of the Cross), and to an understanding of Whitehead and Eddington, ending in an interpretation of the New World significance latent in our African-American tradition."

Officials then at Union recall Putnam as a brilliant loner, a man who had few close associates and who failed to earn the respect of fellow faculty members—who could not understand his ideas.

But Putnam's classes were enormously popular, and he had considerable impact on some students. Kim Hopper, now an assistant professor at City University of New York Medical School and a cofounder of the Coalition for the Homeless, recalled in a 1988 op-ed piece for The New York Times a homeless woman he called Emma, whom he had met when he was a graduate student at Columbia. "My best teacher at graduate school, the late Prof. Peter Putnam," he wrote, "had somehow met and befriended Emma. He enrolled her in community art classes and, at her request, combed through mounds of her 'pseudo-Byronic' poetry looking for something publishable." Hopper says that he learned a great deal from Putnam, "but nothing stayed with me more than his regard for the strengths and richness of common folk—quirky ones in particular."

"Peter was both a saint and a genius," says Coleman Clarke, another graduate student whom Putnam influenced at Columbia. "He would befriend people—blacks, poor people, and outsiders—around Columbia. He went out of his way to find something worthwhile in people. He was extremely helpful to his students who were interested in his work and spent unlimited amounts of time with them. He had intense followers, and they had to speak his language and understand the framework he was developing. It was pretty difficult. He was involved with the linkage of syntax and the symbols and rules of all disciplines and trying to come up with a system linking it all with the nervous system as its core."

Putnam was happy for a while at Union. But the seminary, aware of the Putnam family's affluence, began to pressure him for a substantial gift. Angry, Putnam resigned from Union in the early seventies.

PUTNAM DID NOT HAVE TO WORK BUT BELIEVED IN EARNING his own living, so he looked for another academic position or some other job that would allow him to continue writing. In 1974, he became a volunteer for VISTA, the government program established in 1964 to improve the living conditions of people in impoverished areas of the United States. By this point, he was living with John Claude DeBrew, a black ex-serviceman Putnam had met while DeBrew was attending City University of New York. When VISTA sent Putnam to work with the rural poor in Houma, Louisiana, DeBrew went with him.

Clarke says that Putnam found the VISTA program in Houma to be corrupt and failing to carry out its mission. He resigned from VISTA and, for a while, used his engineering skills to repair radios and television sets. Still determined not to use his family's money for his personal needs, he eventually found work as a janitor on the night shift at one of the Louisiana Department of Transportation's warehouses. He and DeBrew moved into a small apartment building in Houma.

Putnam rode his bicycle to and from work. "He had reached a point where he eschewed worldly goods," says his cousin, Oakley Andrews, of Cleveland. "He didn't own a car, because he didn't want to have to bother with repairs and insurance. He wanted to live a simple, uncomplicated life. His mother would see that he needed a new overcoat and send him one, and he would send it back."

DeBrew, who also worked for the transportation department, wrote poetry. Putnam encouraged him in his writing, and through the Mildred Andrews Foundation (named for his mother), he funded the Good Earth of Terrebonne Press, which published a collection of DeBrew's poems, Maxims from a Poor Man.

In 1976, John Wheeler retired from Princeton and became the director of the Center for Theoretical Physics at the University of Texas. Wheeler worked in Austin for the next nine years (he's now back in Princeton), and during that time, he visited Putnam in Houma. "He lived as poor as Job's turkey," Wheeler recalls. "Peter was writing and reading enormously—philosophy, art, history. He took Christianity seriously—and Princeton, the life of the mind, and the poor. He was an untimely Thoreau."

Through all these years, Wheeler and Putnam maintained a lively correspondence. In his letters to Wheeler, Putnam expounded his complex ideas (many of them quite incomprehensible to a layman) but also wrote about more homely things. In one letter, he quoted from Chinese folk tales, Henry James, Balzac's Illustons perdues, Twain, Bohr, Copernicus, Tolstoy, Hammar-skjold, Emerson, and Carlyle. As a tribute to Wheeler, Putnam persuaded some of Wheeler's best students to write letters to their old professor, paid for the printing and binding of a volume that collected the letters (Family Gathering: Letters to John Archibald Wheeler), and placed copies of the book in important physics libraries around the world.

Putnam and his mother were involved in many charitable pursuits, and they paid particular attention to Princeton. The Mildred Andrews Foundation paid for "Abraham and Isaac," a bronze sculpture that George Segal was commissioned to design as a memorial to the students killed by National Guardsmen in 1970 during an antiwar protest at Kent State University, in Ohio. When officials at Kent State, worried that the evocative sculpting would reopen old wounds, refused to accept it, Mrs. Putnam gave it to Princeton. She and her son also funded a fellowship for graduate students in physics at Princeton and contributed to such projects as the organization of Firestone Library's collection of the papers of R. P. Blackmur and the playwright Luigi Pirandello. Putnam himself donated a bust of Balzac by Auguste Rodin to Firestone Library, and commissioned portraits of John Wheeler and Eugene Wigner (a Nobel laureate and emeritus professor) for the physics department, in Jadwin Hall.

Mrs. Putnam regularly visited her son in Houma, and at his urging, she eventually moved there, settling into an apartment in the same building as his. She was in her eighties, in declining health, and in and out of the hospital. In a letter to Wheeler, Putnam wrote of his mother's courage and her ability to make "the best of whatever is left. Humans may not exercise much foresight for avoiding disasters, but we are marvelous for bearing up in it." To avoid disaster, he said, was to miss an opportunity to learn.

In April 1984, Mrs. Putnam died at the age of ninety. Her son outlived her by less than four years. On the night of December 7, 1987, Peter Putnam was struck by a car and killed while riding his bicycle home from work.

Putnam left behind a mountain of unpublished papers. His protégé, Coleman Clarke, has collected most of them and, with support from Putnam's estate, is determined to see them published. They include seventy volumes of bound typescripts, more than five file-cabinet drawers of correspondence, and a bookcase of journals and notebooks. Clarke, who has published scholarly articles on Putnam's ideas and taught them at the University of Virginia, expects that the complete works of his mentor—spanning physics, biology, philosophy, psychology, history, economics, and political science—will fill nineteen printed volumes. As he sees it, his goal is to make Putnam's work understandable and to achieve for it the recognition it is due. It is an aim that Wheeler endorses wholeheartedly. The publication of Putnam's papers, he says, is "an enterprise comparable in importance" to publishing the writings and diaries of Henry David Thoreau.

Ann Waldron, a frequent contributor to PAW, wrote about art historian John Wilmerding in the issue of December 5, 1990.

From the Graduate College to the Engineering Quadrangle, from the Hamilton Hall courtyard to the Jadwin Hall plaza, sculptures in the Putnam Collection are all over the campus. This map shows the location of each sculpture given by Putnam. Copies of a booklet on the collection, suitable for self-guided tours, are available at the Art Museum.

TRIANGLE TURNS 100!

The Venerable Song-and-Dance Club Celebrates a Century of Musical Comedy

The 1892-93 production of The Honorable Julius Caesar, a musical parody of Shakespeare's tragedy, featured Booth Tarkington 1893 (middle right, in armor) in the role of Cassius. Described by a fellow student as "woefully gaunt, almost cadaverous," Tarkington had the lean and hungry look demanded by the part, as well as a clarion tenor voice. The show proved so popular that the club reprised it the following year and in 1918-19.

IT'S BEEN A HUNDRED YEARS SINCE PRINCETON UNDER-graduates first donned elaborate costumes and took to the boards to dance and sing their way through a raucous night of farce. What later became the Triangle Club grew out of the Princeton College Dramatic Association, which, during the 1890-91 school year, produced Po-ca-bon-tas, or The Gentle Savage. Two years later, the association's president, Booth Tarkington 1893, changed its name to Triangle, after the musical instrument and the triangular route of a popular walk on the campus's edge.

To mark the club's centennial, Firestone Library opened on April 29 an exhibit of Triangle memorabilia culled from its Theatre Collection. Curator Mary Ann Jensen and three assistants spent eight months choosing and organizing the 826 artifacts—including photographs, posters, playbills, musical scores, letters, a piece of McCarter Theatre's original curtain, and Clark Gesner '60's conductor's baton—that comprise "Eternal Triangle: The First Hundred Years." The exhibit chronicles the history of Triangle, from the original Po-ca-bon-tas to this year's show, aptly titled The Older the Better. (According to Jensen, this centennial production is actually Triangle's 104th.)

"Eternal Triangle" is on display through September 8 in Firestone Library's exhibition gallery, which is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. on weekdays and from noon until 5 P.M. on weekends. The Older the Better, which opened earlier this month, will be performed on the Friday and Saturday nights of Reunions (June 7-8). The telephone number of McCarter Theatre's box office is 609-683-8000.

Kenneth S. Clark '05, who later wrote "Going Back to Old Nassau," composed the music and lyrics of The Pretenders (1904-1905), the first Triangle show to be performed especially for students prior to the regular opening. According to Donald A. Marsden '64's authoritative history of Triangle, The Long Kickline (1968), the student performance was a notorious repository "of all the off-color remarks, purple puns, and double entendres later jettisoned" before the general public saw the show.

Triangle raised $450,000 (chiefly from Thomas N. McCarter 1888) for the construction of McCarter Theatre, shown here in an early rendering by architect D. K. Este Fisher, Jr. '13. (The proposed wings of the theater were never built.) Completed in 1930, McCarter replaced the club's previous home, the Casino, built in 1897 on the lower campus and destroyed by fire in 1924.

From Triangle's beginnings through most of the 1960s, all female roles were played by men. The tradition of the all-male kickline dates from the turn of the century and was well entrenched by the 1906-1907 show, The Mummy Monarch (top, right). The center picture shows the kickline, in and out of costume, from Funny Side Up (1963-64), and the bevy of beauties at the right performed in Star-Spangled Banter (1985-86).

opened McCarter Theatre. Its talented cast also included Jimmy Stewart '32, who was relegated to a nonspeaking part playing an accordion in the touring show because his audition went poorly.

Logan took time out from a budding career on Broadway to direct the 1934-35 production, Stags at Bay. Mac P. Wood '36 (left), "the debutante," played opposite S. D. Johnson '35 (right), "the Princeton Man." The show featured three of Triangle's most enduring songs, all penned by Brooks Bowman '36: "Will Love Find a Way," "Love and a Dime," and "East of the Sun."

Four key players in Triangle's history are (from left) Booth Tarkington, Benjamin Franklin Bunn '07, Professor Donald Clive Stuart, and Milton Lyon.

Tarkington starred in two of the first three Triangle productions, led the fundraising effort to build the Casino (the club's first home), and served on Triangle's board for many years.

"Bacon" Bunn—the name came from his passion for bacon-in-a-bun sandwiches at the old Balt cafeteria, on Nassau Street—served as the club's graduate treasurer for nearly sixty years. Known to generations of Triangle members as "Uncle Ben," he chaperoned some forty-five tours—until he was almost ninety.

Stuart, a professor of dramatic literature, directed Triangle productions from 1919 to 1934. Drake's Drum (1923-24), which featured Wallace H. Smith '24's "Ships That Pass in the Night," was judged by many critics as the best Triangle show ever. Viewing the club as a "laboratory" for the teaching of the dramatic arts, he strengthened scripts and stressed unity and organization in the shows.

Milton Lyon has directed most every Triangle production since the 1955-56 Spree de Corps, which one reviewer said "surpasses 'Drake's Drum.'"

“There will be no ‘easy money’ made in the ‘90s,” says Randall A. Hack ’69, president, Princeton University Investment Company...

“... As we globalize Princeton’s endowment, investment decisions are becoming increasingly complex. The critical advantage we have is the combined expertise of our board: their names read like a ‘Who’s Who’ of the financial world. Our board members are consummate professionals with years of experience in top positions within the investment business. They’ve been through it all ...

“In this field you are either leading or you are too late. But our board members realize that the essential ingredients of successful long-term investing never change: thorough analysis, sound judgment, and the discipline to resist short term trends. Our board members and staff devote extraordinary effort to selecting the most effective outside money managers, scrutinizing investment performance, assessing new investments, and making strategic decisions about appropriate levels of exposure in different asset categories ...

“The University endowment spending rule—which limits the portion of endowment value which can be spent in the current operating budget—is the discipline we impose on ourselves today to provide for the needs of the future. Since the rule seeks to insure that the real, inflation-adjusted value of the endowment will be sustained over time, it takes on the significance of a moral bond between generations of Princetonians. It is our pledge that others to come will have the educational resources we have enjoyed ...”

Princeton’s endowment—as well managed as it is—provides only about $7,000, or 29 percent, of a student’s direct educational cost for a year at Princeton. An additional $14,000 is covered by tuition. Annual Giving covers the balance, or about $3,000 per student.

Overall, Annual Giving’s contribution adds up to fully 10 percent of the University’s educational spending. That 10 percent makes a critical difference: it is the margin of excellence that enables Princeton to continue to be the best. Your contribution to Annual Giving helps ensure that the excellence of a Princeton education is made available to others. Please give what you can.

How to Cope with Devastating Illness

AT THE WILL OF THE BODY: REFLECTIONS ON ILLNESS

Arthur W. Frank '68 • Houghton Mifflin, $17.95

THIS IS A fine little book, beautifully written, full of wisdom, and based on the author's experiences with two life-threatening illnesses.

At age thirty-nine, Arthur Frank suffered a heart attack. This was his first experience with illness, the first time he realized that his body was not invulnerable. But eventually, and after a scare, all symptoms of the illness disappeared, his heart healed, and, miraculously, Frank was able to compete in a triathlon.

Much more devastating was Frank's encounter, fifteen months later, with cancer—in his case, a form of testicular cancer that eluded diagnosis for several months. As with his heart attack, he eventually recovered: he was cured of cancer, although not without surgery and months of chemotherapy.

As he struggled with these illnesses, the author learned many lessons, and he shares these with us in an eloquent testimony of survival. He learned how to deal with pain, and with threatened loss. He and his wife lost their innocence about the normal expectations of life. He writes that illness teaches that every part of life is worth experiencing, even the losses.

Frank also learned about the important role of caregivers. Too many people involved in medical care do not have the time to be caregivers, he says, and many may lack the inclination. Frank's chief caregiver was his devoted wife Cathie; he was fortunate in this relationship. And he is mindful of the stress of being a caregiver, who must live with uncertainty and new responsibilities, including coping with the patient's fears and obsessions.

Frank relates how illness changed his life as husband, father, and professor—and in every other way. He rediscovered himself as he learned to be dependent. He emphasizes the importance of holding on to the person you are, even as disease and medicine try to invade and colonize your body. Illness taught Frank that, beyond everything, the body exists and goes on; and in the wisdom of his body's being, he found himself.

He writes of appearances: How should the patient react to his illness? What face should he present to the public? Those who make a public display of cheerfulness and bravery, he says, may be denying their own humanity. For

Frank, what is needed is not denial but recognition. Fear and depression are natural elements of life, and for the patient with a devastating illness, depression may be the most appropriate response. Depression is not recommended, Frank writes, but at times it must be accepted as part of the experience of illness.

Denial is one of the ways in which patients may seek to deal with the fact of their illness. Frank notes that denial may also be part of the reaction pattern of doctors and nurses, of employers, and of friends who find it all too easy to drop out, to disappear from the ill person's life.

One of the finest chapters of At the Will of the Body deals with cancer as a stigma, epitomized by the temporary baldness that comes with chemotherapy. The idea that cancer represents a defect in the ill person's character or identity is a persistent one. Frank feels that, as with AIDS, another dread disease, the stigmatization of the cancer patient can be lessened by group action and by coming out into the open. Stigmatization is overcome, he writes, when instead of hiding the cancer we learn to witness its experience.

The author reflects on the loneliness of illness, especially in a hospital, and he remarks that getting out of the hospital always seemed to him like a rebirth. In his personal mythology, he found himself, like Jacob, wrestling through the long night. And yet he rejects the metaphor of illness as a fight, for example, against the cancer. Rather, he accepts his body even in its altered state, and struggles to deal with his cancer, instead of fighting against it.

Frank's approach to dealing with adversity is not a spiritual one. He does not rely on God as a source of strength. For him, faith is based on an acceptance of things as they are, and a constructive and positive effort to deal with the situation. Quoting from the Tao Te Ching, Frank would have us shift our perspective from the disease to the illness: "See the world as yourself; / Have faith in the way things are."

Arthur

At the Will of the Body invites comparison with the critic Susan Sontag's brief essay called "Illness as Metaphor." Sontag's work is more erudite, and is replete with literary and historical allusions. Frank's is just as well written, but it is less abstract, more personal, and more practical; and it's much more likely to be helpful to its readers.

Who should read this book? It is not for everyone. Some people might wish for a more spiritual orientation; others might look for an approach that stresses more fighting, less participating or accepting. But many intelligent people who are confronted with life-threatening illnesses, especially cancer, will find Frank's analyses and reflections to be clarifying and constructive. His book is certainly readable, and its message is clear. The book is strongly recommended.

Growing Up in the Fin-de-Siècle Midwest

MY HARD BARGAIN

Walter Kim '83 • Alfred A. Knopf, $18.95

IN HIS DEBUT collection of short stories, My Hard Bargain, Walter Kim writes about a new sort of fin-de-siècle malaise—not the debauched, often detached urban vapidness of Bret Easton Ellis (Kim's contemporary), but rather an often literal wasting away of farmers and their offspring after they are cut off from their land. For several of his characters, suffering is exemplified and exacerbated by the virulent side effects of various toxic chemicals used in modern farming.

"... then my broker suggested that I take advantage of this takeover situation by using those appreciated securities to establish a Pooled Income Fund with Princeton."

When companies are about to be taken over or acquired through mergers, their stock often rises substantially in price. If you have been considering supporting Princeton through a Pooled Income Fund — and you count one of these securities among your portfolio — this may be just the timely incentive you need to make that charitable gift.

In addition to helping Princeton, you (and your spouse) would:

- receive quarterly income checks for life,
- avoid long-term capital gains tax inherent in the appreciated securities,
- obtain a charitable deduction in the year of the gift,
- possibly increase your income.

UNIVERSITY

In "On Set-Aside," a farmer recovering from "a pesticide mishap" has signed up for the government program that pays him to let his land lie as fallow as he is. For the first time in his life, he can view a sunny day as "nice" without worrying about whether his crops need sunshine at that moment. (But the sun causes "a painful glare" to reflect off the oval, brass plaques his wife has earned selling microwave ovens in "a real job, off the property.")

In "The Orphan," the narrator's roommate Kyle Markham suffers from an odd, mono-like virus that even his ultra-supportive parents fail to take seriously after a while. The narrator, whose own parents have sold their farm and, wandering in an RV, are lost to him, craves the stability of a household where all the kitchen appliances are "set in flush with the cabinets, as units," rather than hooked up with extension cords. He works his way into the Markham family and, when his friend Kyle starts coughing blood, hopes he can become the Markhams' son.

It is the father's dog that wastes away as another troubled family moves south after selling its farm in "My Hard Bargain," while in "Continuous Breathing Relief," a jar of Vicks VapoRub evokes the narrator's memories of his parent's solicitous care when he was a boy—in sharp contrast to his uncaring girlfriend in the hard world beyond the family, a world for which he was unprepared.

One of the strongest stories in this generally assured collection is "The Personality of Writing." Its narrator is a once-gifted teenager now confined to an asylum for boys who slugged cocktails of CPD—a drug used to ease the childbirth labor of large farm animals—and suffered severe brain damage as a result. The narrator claims that he, unlike his fellow inmates, has largely overcome the effects of the drug and is now comprehensible, as witnessed by his "personality of writing"—that is, his unique voice. Kim's clever string of malapropisms—"unencourageable" instead of "incorrigible," "digress" instead of "deteriorate," "regression of foster homes" instead of "progression"—demonstrate his ability for pizzazz in a style that is otherwise as quiet, low-key, and flat as the landscape in the background of each story.

Princeton surfaces in just one story, "A Satisfying Ride in the Country," about a twenty-seven-year-old alumnus who "majored in English Lit with a minor in hallucinogens." Transplanted from Iowa and alone in an Eastern city, the narrator, now a media critic with his own column, has such a shaky sense of self despite his success that he decides to take an IQ test to see if he is still a genius—which he was “by two points” when tested as a boy. He senses he has lost it, and in one of the most moving passages in the book, he confirms his hunch:

I sat there, shaking. I faced the wall and thought of Iowa, of its bigways and seasons and churches and sky. I would have been happy to stay there, but my teachers and family pushed me out. They sent me out here, to the East, where the valedictorians battle it out so their lazy hometowns can have peace. And here I was. Trying to send home good reports only, lying to my brother.

And then the clincher (at which Kim is particularly good):

The drop was of a mere six points, of course, but that is a lot when you are alone and have only two to spare.

Equally stunning is the opening story, “Planetarium,” a quiet dazzler about a Mormon high school basketball team's group cure for masturbation in a society that regards a drink of Coca-Cola as a sin. It is a coming-of-age story about discovering that “a private life is the world's worst punishment” and that sin is as ubiquitous and inevitable as the stars.

This is resonant writing, writing about young men who have made their bargains, hard bargains, all. Life is a hard bargain. And Walter Kim, who writes about what he knows—farmers, boys growing up (female characters people his stories only peripherally)—in a style that is lean and quiet and a tone that is solemn, is a writer to watch.

Softball Regains Ivy Title Behind Power Pitching and Slugger Silverman

1895 FIELD, APRIL 13. In the top half of the seventh and last inning, with her team leading Yale, 2-1, second baseman Kathy Kobler '91 dropped a foul pop-up that could have been the final out, enabling the Tigers to complete a doubleheader sweep of the visiting Elis. Taking full advantage of Kobler's mishap, Seema Hingorani stroked a two-run double to give the Bulldogs a 3-2 lead.

This unfortunate chain of events brought back memories of the Tigers' fall from the top last year. Battling undefeated Brown in Providence for the Ivy League title, Princeton was shut out, 1-0, in the first game of a twinbill, and then played to a tie in the nightcap as darkness fell and the game was called. For the first time in eight years, the Tigers were bridesmaids to the league champion, as their inability to perform under fire caught up to them at an inopportune time. The 1990 campaign might aptly be described as "the one that got away."

This year, however, the script had a dramatically different ending. Instead of succumbing to dreadful weather and lukewarm desire, the Tigers rallied as if they were playing the game of their lives. With one out in the bottom of the seventh and runners on first and second, third baseman Leslie Silverman '92 launched a towering double to clear the bases and give Princeton an exciting 4-3 victory. The following day, the Tigers rode their momentum to a doubleheader sweep of Brown, 7-0 and 4-3. The Ivy crown was theirs once again. Fittingly, it was Kobler who registered the final put-out of the second game.

"Personally, it was a lot of fun to win it this year," says Cindy Cohen, the Tigers' coach and mentor. "Not winning it last year has made us all appreciate it much more this year. Beating Brown at home was a nice way to do it."

Princeton's dramatic title-clinching weekend was a microcosm of the entire season. Boasting an impressive record (23-10 at press time) that included victories over highly ranked foes like Rutgers, the Tigers found all sorts of ways to win ball games. When the offense, often prone to power outages, turned on the juice, Princeton lit up the scoreboard and put the opponent away by the second or third inning. Among such trampled foes were Seton Hall (13-0), Harvard (11-1), Villanova (10-0), and Delaware (14-1). But more often than not, Princeton pulled out close wins on the strength of its pitching staff, such as 1-0 decisions over Yale and Towson State. All but three of the Tigers' ten losses were shutouts. After last year's disappointing swoon, Princeton is now back in contention as one of the best teams in the East.

Leading the Tiger attack is Silverman, a super slugger who was all but unstoppable at the plate this year. Silverman led the team in nearly every offensive category, batting .438 and smacking seven homers. The infielder's sudden surge of power recalls the brilliant career of Linda Smolka '89, the all-American who was Princeton's last great slugger.

Leslie Silverman '92, Princeton's power-hitting third baseman, was the team's main offensive force this year. She led the Tigers in almost every hitting category and batted .438.

The Tigers' pitching staff limited opponents to fewer than two runs per game, and one reason was Lisa Moore '94. Her E.R.A. fell to below one, and she broke Princeton's single-season strikeout record.

In addition to Silverman, senior captain Lori Dickerson and shortstop Steph Fox '93, a regional all-American, both contributed mightily with their bats. Dickerson, who hit the team's only other home run, started slowly but had lifted her average to .318 by the end of April. By contrast, Fox exploded early on, then slumped. Cohen believes that her gifted, determined shortstop will escape the doldrums by season's end and regain her all-American form.

"The only thing that would hurt Steph is what she does to herself mentally," Cohen says. "In this game, three hits out of ten, and you're considered good. That means seven times you're not successful. The only thing Steph has to get used to is the fact that she's not gonna be successful all the time."

Without doubt, the team's forte was its pitching. Freshmen Lisa Moore and Karen Drill, sophomore Stacie Bonner, and Dickerson served up very few mistakes, collectively holding their opponents to fewer than two runs per game. Moore, in particular, bedazzled batters with her blazing, rising fastball and a newly developed drop. By late April, the rookie phenom had won thirteen games against five losses and compiled an earned-run average of just 0.85. On April 20, just two-thirds of the way through the season, Moore broke Dawn Roberts '91's Princeton record of 158 strikeouts in a single season. Given her nearly flawless form and capacity for further development, Moore may well become Princeton's best ace ever.

Bonner, the Tigers' steady number-two starter, lacks Moore's panache, but still dispatched opposing batters routinely and effectively. Pitching with an accuracy unmatched even by Moore, Bonner consistently hit the perfect spots in the strike zone and coaxed batters into hitting weak grounders or pop-ups.

On April 19 and 20, at a tournament Princeton hosted, overpowering pitching and sound defense were not enough to push the Tigers past Connecticut, the second-ranked team in the East. The Huskies countered with even better pitching and shut out Princeton twice, 2-0 and 1-0. If the Tigers are to qualify for the N.C.A.A. tournament, at the end of May, they must defeat such highly ranked opponents from the East as Penn State, Drexel, and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

"We don't have to go undefeated for the rest of the year, but we do need to win most of the games," says Cohen. "And we certainly have to beat the good people to prove that we're among the good people."

If the Tigers do string together a bunch of upsets and emerge as the beast of the East, they will have written a comeback story as sweet as the lyrics of their dug-out chants. But even if they fall short, they will fondly remember this season as the one in which they stood once again atop the Ivy tower.

Men's Lacrosse Soars to No. 5 Ranking in Nation

THE MEN'S LACROSSE program (9-2 overall; 3-1 Ivy) has achieved a remarkable turnaround since it hit bottom in the late 1980s. Now in his fourth season as head coach, Bill Tierney has taken the Tigers from a 2-13 record in 1988 to contention for a berth in the N.C.A.A. playoffs and a fifth-place ranking in the U.S.I.L.A. polls, behind North Carolina, Brown, Virginia, and Maryland. In their first match of the season, the Tigers trounced Johns Hopkins, 15-10, proving that their defeat of the Maryland powerhouse in the first round of last year's playoffs was no fluke. Princeton later avenged last year's 17-8 loss to Yale in the N.C.A.A.

quarterfinals by defeating the Bulldogs by the same score. The team rose as high as number two in the polls before a close 7-5 loss to Brown on Lourie-Love Field pushed the Tigers down to their current notch. With wins in his last three regular-season games, Tierney could lift his coaching record at Princeton (currently, 28-29) to above .500—a long way from 1988.

Freshmen figure prominently in the Tigers' success. At midfield, three out of the nine players who typically see action are freshmen, and the team boasts a pair of talented rookie starters. Attackman

Freshman goalkeeper Scott Bacigalupo had fifteen saves in Princeton's 9-6 defeat of eleventh-ranked Rutgers. The victory lifted the Tigers to number three in the national polls; they later fell to fifth.

SOURCE OF TABLE: THE CHRONICLE OF HIGHER EDUCATION

ALMOST DROWNED OUT by the "March Madness" of the N.C.A.A.'s basketball championships, the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics presented its long-awaited report on how universities should restore the integrity of scandal-tainted college sports.

Members of the commission, among them Dick Kazmaier '52, the Ivy League's only winner of the Heisman Trophy, recommended that college presidents bring athletic programs more under their own control, that universities raise academic requirements for students to be eligible to compete, and that each school ensure that revenue derived from athletic programs benefits the entire university. Noting the "critical role" alumni play in university affairs, and the devaluation of diplomas from tainted schools, the commission also wrote that "You can help protect the stake you hold in that degree by insisting that the athletics program is directed along ethical lines."

If Ivy Leaguers sensed that the Knight Commission's report was meant more for scandal-plagued universities in the nation's big-time athletic conferences, then The Chronicle of Higher Education seemed to validate their feeling. In late March, the newspaper published a comprehensive survey of graduation rates of athletes and other students at 262 universities with large athletic programs. The results showed that all Ivy students—and particularly athletes—graduated at a far higher rate than their counterparts at most other schools. Indeed, wrote The Chronicle's Douglas Lederman '84, athletes' overall graduation rates "were skewed upward by more than a dozen private universities, including those in the Ivy League, which sponsor large sports programs and graduate high proportions of their athletes."

The survey, which tracked freshmen who matriculated in 1984 and tallied how many had graduated by 1989, showed that, perhaps because they have only a limited time in which they are eligible to compete and often enjoy full scholarships and support services like tutoring, athletes in general were more successful than non-athletes; that women graduated at a higher rate than men; and that public-university students of all kinds were less likely to receive their degrees than students at private colleges.

The Chronicle specifically surveyed graduation rates among football and men's basketball players, and these tallies were most revealing. In general, the basketball players were the least likely to graduate of all students. Just a third of the cagers overall received their degrees within five years, and in some leagues the rate was barely a tenth (in the Southeastern Conference, only 14 percent). Statistics for football players were somewhat better, but hardly anything to write home about: 47 percent graduated within five years. In the table on page 38 are the statistics for the eight Ivy schools as well as Duke and Stanford universities, which have similar academic standards but unlike the Ivies offer athletic scholarships.

Kevin Lowe '94 tied a Princeton record with nine assists in a single game (the victory over Yale); at press time, he led the team with thirty-seven points. The other starting freshman, Scott Bagicalupo, has the lowest goals-against average of all Ivy League goalkeepers. Each has been named the Ivy League Freshman of the Week once, and Lowe has added a Player of the Week award to his scrapbook. Attackman Justin Tortolani '92 has been Princeton's main offensive threat, scoring twenty-three goals and four assists through eleven games. Sometime this season, he is certain to tally his one hundredth career point.

Winter Sports Wrap-Up

AT THE END of another outstanding season, the undefeated (9-0) MEN'S SWIMMING team, champion of the E.I.S.L. for an eighth straight year, finished with a disappointing performance in the N.C.A.A. championships. The 200-yard medley relay team failed to retain the national crown it had held for two years, and the eleven Princetonians at the N.C.A.A.s mustered just thirty-two points for a twenty-third-place finish. But for their roles in the team's dominating regular-season performance, several swimmers earned first-team all-Ivy honors: Nelson Diebel '94, Naiden Kremeliev '93, Ty Nelson '91, and divers Lyle Suess '91 and Kenny Iams '91, as well as four relay teams. Freshman Grace Cornelius and sophomore Nathalie Wunderlich won first-team all-Ivy honors for the WOMEN'S SWIMMING team. The Tigers (7-1 overall; 7-0 Ivy), champions of the Ivy League, can look forward to another strong season next year, because only a few of their best competitors will graduate this June.

The WOMEN'S BASKETBALL team (18-8 overall; 10-4 Ivy) stormed to a second-place finish in the Ivy League with resounding wins over Harvard, the eventual Ivy champ, and Dartmouth in the last weekend of play. Forward Corneille Burt '92 was selected for the first-team all-Ivy.

In MEN'S FENCING (7-7 overall; 4-2 Ivy), the saber-wielding Garreth Sarosi '93 earned a first-team all-Ivy selection, the second year in a row he has been so honored. By the end of the Ivy season, he had compiled a 31-9 individual record.

The SQUASH program closed out a strong season when the women's squad rolled over Dartmouth and Brown to finish with a perfect record (7-0 overall; 5-0 Ivy). At the W.I.S.R.A. individual championships, co-captain Mary Foulk '91 beat out her teammate Hope MacKay '92 for third place. The men's team (12-1 overall; 5-1 Ivy) finished second in the Ivies to Harvard, and was also runner-up to the Cantabs at the I.S.A. team championships.

Senior Bill Burke, the MEN'S INDOOR TRACK co-captain who became Princeton's first sub-four-minute miler in February, capped a brilliant season by capturing fifth place at the N.C.A.A. championships with a time of 3:59.7. Jay Richards '92 took thirteenth in the high jump with a leap of 7'½".

Senior John Gluckow was the stand-out on a middling Tiger WRESTLING squad (11-10-1 overall; 3-3 Ivy), earning all-Ivy honors and representing Princeton at the N.C.A.A. championships in Iowa City, Iowa, where he was eliminated in his first match. □

1912 came at a time to Princeton when changes in transportation were so radical that we still had no idea of the final practical service which the automobile was to perform for us. We didn't realize that it would ultimately cause a revolution in transportation. Today there are revolutions developing all about us which we hardly realize are started.

When we first came to college we used to send telegrams because we didn't have the facilities to use the telephone as we use it today. In those days we knew nothing of the instantaneous transmission of information, including pictures, that could be sent by television. Today we are already developing a process known as FAX which can transmit a diagram or photograph without wires from a city on the East Coast, far distant from our western cities.

13 ALBION R. BRYAN Box F Frenchtown, NJ 08825

OLD GUARD REUNION DATE: June 8—luncheon at noon in the Chancellor Green Library Building. 1913 hopes to be represented there by some of the Class widows and at least some of the sons and daughters of '13.

Here is a list of some of the widows. If you need a fuller address, send the Class Secretary a postcard.

Mrs. Frank Dennette Adams, Chestnut Hill, MA 02167; Mrs. Robert T. Baldwin, Rochester Hills, MI 48309; Mrs. Samuel D. Bell, Swyned, PA 19436; Mrs. Wendell W. Brown, Naples, Italy; Mrs. Henry L. Dewey, Mt. Kisco, NY 10549; Mrs. Thomas W. Henderson, So. Pasadena, CA 91030; Mrs. William D. Horne, Barrington, IL 60010; Mrs. Lawrence D. Howell, Winston-Salem, NC 27103; Mrs. Harold A. Loeb, Potomac, MD 20854-4057; Mrs. Seward McKittrick, St. Louis, MO 63139; Mrs. Joseph H. Parsons, New York, NY 10021; Mrs. Alan F. Randolph, Vero Beach, FL 32962; Mrs. Leon Reussille, Lakewood, NJ 08701; Mrs. Mary G. Roebbing, Trenton, NJ 08618; Mrs. James McK. Rose, Paramus, NJ 07652; Mrs. Edward Sbacher, Grassano, Firenze, Italy; Mrs. John F. Simmons, Washington, D.C. 20007; Mrs. Richard H. Staebler, Arizona City, AZ 85223; Mrs. Alan T. Waterman, Solvang, CA 93463.

14 C. EARL MOORE Rosemont Plaza, Apt. 117 Rosemont, PA 19010

No news from the widows of our classmates, but the sons of two of our classmates have done their bit to keep 1914 alive. The daughter of our classmate Jim Bruce did her part for Class notes some time ago and the contribution of Louise Bruce appeared in the ALUMNI WEEKLY several months ago.

From A. H. Stump Jr. '48, son of our classmate A. Herman Stump, comes this letter, "I knew some of the departed grads from earlier times when my father was still alive. The article of Louise Bruce brought back memories of 1914 and Jim Bruce. I went to Gilman School and then on to Princeton. After graduation, I joined the family insurance firm of Corron Black, Stump, Harvey & Cook, Inc., of Hunt Valley, Md. and I am still very much involved in the business. Thanks for keeping 1914 alive for the next generation."

Hank Canda, son of our classmate, Henry Canda, and stepson of your classmate, Vince Armstrong, writes, "My mother told me that in 1914 she was in Berlin when World War I broke out. She and her husband were able to obtain first-class passage on one of the ships leaving England, probably made possible by the fact that her family had been in the shipping business. Hobe Baker was also aboard, but he was only able to travel second or third class. My mother used to take her first-class food down to Hobe on a lower deck, and he surely appreciated her kindness. Hobe was a great guy. I saw there are four survivors of 1914. Good luck to them. 1914 is the second-best class in Princeton, next to my class of 1943 which, naturally, is the best."

15 ROBERT BOYLE III '47 Box 2335 Wayne, NJ 07470

Class Agent George H. Copeland writes from Great Neck, N.Y., assuring us that he is indeed alive and in good health. His address is 111 Hampshire Rd., Great Neck, N.Y. 10023-1230.

17 IKE GRAMMER, c/o Chemical Bank 30 Rockefeller Plaza, Ste. 6100 New York, NY 10112

A reminder that Saturday, June 8 is our 74th reunion. We hope to have a good attendance and we especially hope Class widows and offspring of all ages will grace our table at the Old Guard luncheon.

Perry Hall was honored by the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center with the dedication of the Baldwin-Hall Lounge on Sept. 19, 1990. Bob Baldwin '42 writes, "The lounge was funded in part by a gift from Morgan Stanley, of which he was a founding partner and ultimately the managing partner. I was pleased to have my name associated with his as we have a relationship which dates back almost 45 years. In addition, I succeeded him as a trustee of Presbyterian Hospital when he retired from that post in 1973." Perry and Bob are pictured on Perry's boat THE TOMAHAWK off Martha's Vineyard.

Herewith are excerpts from some additional letters of appreciation received from awardees of 1917 scholarships. Adam Z. Gileski, a senior and a recipient of the Arthur Vandervoort Savage War Memorial Scholarship, writes, "I am delighted to be the recipient of a Class of 1917 scholarship for the second year in a row. It is a sobering experience to read about the exceptional bravery of the men from the 'wartime' classes—and to think that I might also be a graduate of a 'wartime' class. Of course I hold great hope that our men and women will do what they have to in Kuwait and return home safely and promptly. Although I am a molecular biology major, I have decided to pursue a career in finance. As much as I am anticipating graduation, I am already sorry to be leaving. Princeton holds an encyclopedia full of knowledge and a scrapbook full of memories that I will cherish during the many times that I will think longingly of Old Nassau. Alumni like the Class of 1917 make me so grateful and command my deepest respect and gratitude."

We have a memorial in this issue.

18 JARVIS CROWMELL Meadow Lakes, Apt. 3108 Hightstown, NJ 08520

We have an interesting request for help in learning about our classmate, Edward M. Cronin, who was killed in France on Sept. 13, 1918, while piloting a DeHavilland DH4 in the Great War. The request comes from Robert Gabel '63, a great-nephew. A number of family members are, most understandably, anxious to learn about Ed's time at Princeton as well as any anecdotes that any of us might recall. Bob Gabel also seeks a replacement for his great uncle's 1918 banner, so if any of you stalwarts know how Bob could get one, please write him at 6 Robert Rd., Acton, MA 01720. And send Bob any news items you may recall.

We recently lost two of our wonderful classmates. Hilary Ramold Chambers died Mar. 4 in West Orange, N.J., and we will try to get a memorial printed in the coming months. We also lost John S. Woodbridge, who crossed the bar on Mar. 1 in Tucson, Ariz. We have almost no data on John's life and times, and if any of you can help in that regard, please let your Secretary know.

This column has recently run summaries of those present undergraduates who hold Class of '18 scholarships. Those stories raised the question of how many such scholarships the class sponsors. The University-published booklet on the general subject has been sent to us and the answer seems to be that we are the proud originators of ten! One of them is an endowed fund established in 1984 in memory of deceased classmates, and initial funding was in honor of our dear class treasurer, P. Blair Lee. The other nine are WWI memorial scholarships named in memory of Darwin Bardwell, William Beal, Meredith Doud, James Elder, Newell Fiske, Gordon Gregory, Roy Leidy, Francis Middleditch, and John Westcott. Each of these brave classmates died in the line of duty, either in France on the battlefield or of wounds received there. May they rest in peace.

We have a memorial in this issue.

19 GEORGE B. LARKIN 14 Lake Forest Dr. Charlottesville, VA 22901

Henry Doyle saw a limerick in a PAW, so he wrote the following for 1919:

There was a young lady of Westwood
Who ate with a zest, as a guest should
But nibbling or sipping
By dribbling or dripping,
Her lips would get less than her chest would.

He says that, at 94, he is still "vertical and automotive," and enjoyed his 75th reunion at Lawrenceville. Best of all, his three children and 24 grandchildren are all well, happy, and prospering.

20 SALLY S. McALPIN W'20 Box 670 Princeton, NJ 08542

protector, and with You-Know-Who. Dave would pop his buttons with pride that Sally was doing her bit for 1920, and now following in his footsteps as honorary president. Oops! There go the lady's buttons! Sally is bursting with gratitude to the Class and University for this latest honor.

The death of Betty Deyo McNeely was reported lately in these notes. Walt Morgan now writes us that he and Helen found themselves on the same Florida-bound plane as Betty. She was taken ill, and attended by a doctor, but refused to be met by an ambulance and went alone to her own apartment. Sad to say she died of a heart attack the next night. I'm sure she is happy now with Wop.

This is our last Class notes before Reunions on June 8 and it makes me wonder why our 71st shouldn't be just as much fun as the 70th? It could be even more successful if Walt and Helen Morgan join the Danes, Donners, Wolfs, and Elmer Greasy, whom we are counting on. Also, the luncheon can include a five-minute annual meeting if we want! Riding in carts is fun, with all the alumni banked along the route and just looking for something to cheer about. Last year five of our Class started out on foot but only Elmer passed the reviewing stand perched on the back of the secretary's cart.

Also remember how near the front of the P-rade 1920 marches. Very exciting! We were greeted with wild cheers last year (Possibly due to the fact that at long last the P-rade had started moving).

At the February alumni meeting only the Art Meads Jr. and Sally materialized. What you missed will be in the next Class notes.

A. EDWARD CONOVER
331 Lower Dolington Rd., Apt. C-4
Newtown, PA 18940

Plans for our 70th reunion! Tom Roberts and Kay have invited all those who are coming back "to the best old place of all" to gather at their home—32 Hodge Road—at ten o'clock Saturday morning. Chas Haines will memorialize the 24 classmates who have left us since our 65th. Also on hand we expect Fran Bouman, Don Foresman, and Ed Conover. Other possibilities are Ham Morris and Watt Matheus.

Our next stop will be the Chancellor Green Rotunda, where we will have lunch as Old, Old Guard guests of the University. Golf carts, driven by under-graduates, will be available for those joining the P-rade at 2 P.M. Note the new route in the Apr. 3 P.M. It's shorter. Anyone for walking?

Following John Hamilton's request for stories about Dick Halliburton for an upcoming book, Harvey Phillips '25 recalled entertaining Dick over night in the mild early spring of the mid-1920s. Dick was completely unprepared for the next day's snowstorm, with the prospect of a 35-mile drive to a speaking engagement. The loan of one of those big, warm racoonskin coats solved the problem. It was duly returned, but it must have been quite a sizable bundle. Just one of those minor problems confronted by the famous.

The Class sends birthday greetings to Brandon Barringer, 92 on June 11, Fran Bouman, 92 on May 31, and Alexander Butcher, 93 on June 8. Best wishes to all.

John Fawcett died Oct. 16, 1990. A memorial will follow.

JACK REYNOLDS, JOHN CARTER '60
103 East 84th St.
New York, NY 10028

We recently received a very nice note from Leyland Cobb '55, son of Andrew Cobb. Lee and his family live in Naples, Fla., where he is the executive director of the Chamber of Commerce. He reported that he spoke with Mrs. Kay Manchbee recently who sounded great and is enjoying life in Florida very much.

Lee included an announcement that Thomas L. Graham Jr. '55, son of Thomas Graham, was being honored by his class at their special awards dinner Feb. 16. We stopped by to say hello to Scott McVay '55, president of the 1922 Foundation. He serves on the '55 Class Committee and told us about Tom Graham's achievements as general counsel to the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. Scott is executive director of the Geraldine Dodge Foundation in Morristown, N.J., and he introduced us to one of his associates, Taber Hand, the grandson of John Poe. Taber recalls his grandfather very fondly and is sorry that he passed away so early in his life. He says Lydia Poe is living at a retirement home in Newtown Square, Penn. and is in excellent health.

Taber has many letters that John Poe received from classmates who visited his house for reunions and other get-togethers. The assistant secretary recalls that his father introduced him to Mr. Poe in the fall of 1956, when he was entering as a freshman, and Mr. Poe helped him open a bank account at the Princeton Bank and Trust Co.

Jack Lewis recalls many mini-reunions that occurred in early years with Jerry Jiranek. He and Francis Corcoran and Bill Dunkak, would meet at the Jiranek house in Old Greenwich, Conn. on Friday evening before the Yale game in New Haven. He also reported that Mrs. Thurston Laushe attended the Service of Remembrance at Alumni Day.

Jack Reynolds reported that he was honored by the board and officers of Cloister Inn on Alumni Day. He was named a "trustee emeritus" and received a hardwood-based, mounted clock commemorating his many years of service to Cloister Inn. Jack can be reached at 908-367-0218 in Lakewood, N.J.

Albert E. Kabot and his wife, Marion, recently shared broken hips! Both are on the mend.

James Merluster reports that the years are passing actively, pleasantly, and rapidly. He goes regularly to the office when not at his farm, northwest of Nashville, where he raises corn, wheat, soybeans, tobacco, and cattle. He says, "Of course the bottom line is poor, but it affords a place to go!"

Hugo Mayer is feeling better these days and hoping for a good 1991!

Donald Griffin reports no new news, save for the Class's relatively new "co-ed" status, with Betty Gorman collecting dues, Betty Spence looking after Class widows, and Lisey Good writing notes for mw.

Louis Dailey recently testified at a state public hearing about an ordinance under consideration that could affect today's art market. He is looking forward once again to spending the summer in New Hampshire, raising blueberries. Last summer's crop yielded 37 tons.

We regret to report the deaths of Patrick Beattie on Nov. 1, 1990, and Thomas Lauer on Nov. 12, 1990. We have memorials in this issue.

William Blair writes from Naples, Fla., that he is still kicking, but not raising much dust. Crosby Boyd still spends winters at Islamorada and summers at Cape May. At this time of the year he fishes the Florida Keys whenever the weather permits. Del Bryan sends best wishes to all. Jim Cutting is enthusiastic about their retirement home, where they have many Annapolis friends. He and Winnie are planning to attend Reunions next June. Mackinnon Ellis writes that life in beautiful East Tennessee moves happily along, even though he becomes more and more dependent on Kel as his ambulation becomes less effective. They plan to remain in their home as long as they can. Martin Everett and his wife, Katherine, moved from Lakeville last fall and took up residence at Somers Manor, PO Box 445, Somers, NY 10589, where they would love to hear from friends. Perry Faeth has been in Paris for three months celebrating his 88th birthday. Fred Fotb still walks one mile each day to keep in shape—a half-mile down to the drug store to get the N.Y. Times and a half-mile uphill to his home in Cedar Grove, N.J. Benjamin Goodman has been in the Yucatan enjoying the sunshine and white sand beaches. Mal Hauen, who lives in historic and now almost rebuilt Charleston calls 1990 "the year for the birds." He had three sojourns in the hospital, the last one with pneumonia. Fortunately, he is fine now. Henry Holtenberg hopes they can be with us next June. Tom Kiernan sends his greetings to all.

Our 66th reunion dinner will be at the Nassau Club, Fri., June 7, at 6 P.M. We will join the Old Guard Luncheon before the P-rade—which will follow a new route through the middle of campus, ending up in an "Exciting Finale" at the Triumphal Entranceway to Poe Field, where marchers will pass in review between bleachers and honor-stands for the Old Guard and the 25th and 50th reunions. Also new this year will be an expanded program of rides, refreshments, and pageantry. DON'T MISS IT!

Our most recent bridegroom is Ned Minor. "On Apr. 4, 1990, Roberta Miller and I were married and are living at Fair Haven Retirement Home in Sykesville, Md.—a very pleasant place. My only complaint is that I have no complaint—so it is a wonderful world!"

Martha and Jim Nields made their usual winter visit to Pine Cay in the Bahamas. More recently, Jim has been honored by the receipt of the Boar's Head Award "for general merit and service to the Hardwick, Mass. community." Louise and Harvey Phillips write from Sea Island Hotel, Myrtle Beach, S.C. "Our favorite seaside site. Have been coming here since 1940—just a super place." Don Fudge, from Elmira, N.Y., writes: "We spent last summer driving back and forth to our summer place in Pennsylvania, about 40 miles. That's the extent of our traveling these days." Gordon Groth reports that his daughter, Mary Johnston, who some years ago was a California women's tennis champion, has passed her Calif. law exams. From Al Gross, recently retired from Wall Street, "Still reading to the blind in some of my spare time, of which I have plenty."

A gift of $1,000 has been received by the Class Foundation in honor of Harry Steeger. Classmates are again reminded of the existence of this assistance fund.

We regret to report the death of Stephen C. Cleaves on March 18, 1991. A memorial will follow.

Suddenly, from the secretarial files appears a four-page Princeton 1951 memento of 40 years ago in the form of a battered copy of 1926's "Conference Program" of the first "On Campus" Reunion. Two whole days of precepts, forums, panels, and lectures on world-important subjects by leading names from the faculty.

A Legacy of Service

"I'D HOPED FOR A PEACEFUL RESOLUTION. I'm terribly disappointed that this was the only way the (Iraq) situation could go . . . We must not be carried away with a feeling of euphoria with our success," Colonel Robert W. L. Bross '41, U.S.M.C. (retired) told The Island Packet of Hilton Head, South Carolina.

monious articles about the United States . . . kind of the same techniques as we are seeing with Saddam Hussein now." Bross came to know ambassadors George Kennan '25 and "Chip" Bohlen, and he believes that men of a similarly high caliber lead our diplomatic corps today.

A variety of assignments followed. During the Vietnam era, Bross served as a senior adviser to the Korean Marine Corps.

After retiring from the Marines in 1968, Bross joined the faculty of Episcopal High School in Alexandria, Virginia, and rose to become assistant headmaster. After his second retirement, in 1982, he moved to Hilton Head. Bross spoke to Hilton Head Island Packet reporter Nancy K. Wellard on the eve of his departure from Hilton Head for a military retirement community in Atlantic Beach, Florida. According to the article, he and his wife, Pat, will "leave behind a legacy of community service and inspiration." Bross is pictured here in one of his many volunteer roles, as a member of the choir of St. Luke's Church.

Accommodations in Holder and Hamilton. Jim Neuman, reunion chairman, surrounded by a distinguished group of 1926 Reunion Committee members. Stapled to the back page of the program are editorial comments from the ALUMNI WEEKLY—"The Class of 1926 literally stole the show . . . Holder and Hamilton were ideal locations for an 'On Campus' 25th and every aspect of the elaborate program reflected the intensive planning which went into 'Operation '26' . . . No Princeton Class had ever drawn 300 members back for a Reunion; 1926 registered an astounding 347, a record-breaking attendance, 59 more than any Class has previously had for any gathering."

Four miles down the pike, that's how far Eleanor and Bill Walstrum moved from East Dennis, Mass., to a new retirement center at South Yarmouth, Mass., (Thirwood Place, 237 North Main Street, Apt. 237, Zip 02664). Bill reports the new Class Directory will be ready at the 65th—thanks to Howie Kiser and Alumni Records.

Sally and Artbur (Toodles) Hughes, who recently celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary, are living in Connecticut, Toodles in a nursing home in Branford, where he is being treated for Alzheimer's and Sally nearby in Guilford. Their family of four children, 13 grandchildren, and 10 great-grandchildren receives a high listing in the Progeny Sweepstakes.

We record with sadness the deaths of Chan Forman Mar. 18 and DeWitt Smith Mar. 4. Memorials will follow. We have a memorial in this issue.

NELSON R. BURR
36 Lexington Rd.
West Hartford, CT 06119

We have a cheerful letter from Chick Hendricks since he and Pat came to our 63rd reunion, and were capably guided around the campus by Kuich Mayers. After the meeting they made a brief visit to New York, and then embarked for one of those Celebrity Cruises luxury vacations in Bermuda, "one of our favorite holiday haunts over the years. It was a delightful interlude on the way to visiting friends and relatives on Long Island before returning to sunny Canary Islands. Here's to our 65th!"

Joe Bryan would appreciate "double congratulations." First, because he has become a great-grandfather and second because his son Courtlandt has written a "profile" of General Norman Schwartzkopf, published in the NEW REPUBLIC and reprinted by the READER'S DIGEST.

Bob Glanz is "still enjoying lawn bowling and bridge and a few good books." He reports that Dick Smith in Sarasota had been "quite ill," but was on the way to recovery. Bob is still in Sun City Center, Fla., at Box 31, 101 Trinity Lakes Dr., 33570-5730.

Jim Crawford sends his new address: Apt. 290, 100 Norman Dr., Mars, PA 16046.

Keep news dropping through the mail slot in this secretary's front door!

Ed.'s NOTE: The April 3 column should have read: "Fred Wardenberg has moved to a retirement village in Scottsdale, Ariz. 'Still play golf,' he says, 'a couple of times a week, less well than a few years ago.'" PAW regrets the error.

R. PARK JOHNSON

Penney Farms, FL 32079; 904-284-8698

The plans for the 63rd reunion at Princeton, June 7-8, are made, and there will soon be in the mail a communication with all the details and a reply card to be sent in. These opportunities for renewed friendships and a "touching back to base" at Old Nassau are increasingly significant as the years roll by, and this year is a good time to make the opportunity a reality.

The Class dinner on Friday evening will be held at the Town House Motel in Hightstown, just off the turnpike exit. There will be entertainment by the Footnotes singing group and the usual good fellowship that evening. Bus transportation will be available Saturday morning to the noon luncheon at Prospect House on campus, with return to the motel following the P-rade.

It is always a satisfaction to discover what happened to a classmate whose name has been on the "lost list" for many years. Park Johnson happened to learn from a friend in Florida that she was a second cousin of Bob Schall. From another cousin the address of Mrs. Robert Bogardus Schall in Melbourne, Fla., was provided. Elizabeth Schall, who married Bob in 1970, replied that Bob had died on Aug. 30, 1988, in Melbourne, after a career in radio and television, part of it with the U.S. government and the armed services. So we can transfer Bob's name from the "lost list" to the In Memoriam roll of the Class.

Word has been received of the death of Katherine Cast Rose, widow of Chappie Rose, on Mar. 25 in Washington. The sympathy of the Class is with their son Jonathan and his family. We have memorials in this issue.

62nd Reunion Luncheon June 8

Gather round at Cap & Gown before the P-rade on Sat., June 8. If coming, please contact Spence Marsb, 82 Garfield Ave., Madison, NJ 07940, 201-377-3984.

Ted Wells relates, "In June last year, I retired after spending 18 years learning the banking business from the top down. It wasn't my idea—the bank of which I was chairman was merged with a larger bank and I was merged into the ranks of the unemployed. I must admit that I am enjoying it." Charlie Thompson finds that "La Jolla is not the same without Jeff Alison and Brad Sedon, but it still beats St. Louis, both summer and winter. All well otherwise."

Bout McDougal reports that he and Winnie are well. They divide their time between Dunedin, Fla. and various points north, visiting their home in Winnetka, their daughter Ellen in East Lempster, N.H., and their son Christopher and his wife in Newport Beach, Calif., where Chris is an emergency physician. Their youngest son, Edward, still a bachelor, is a teacher, but spends most of his time making Christian films, which have been quite successful. After our 60th reunion, Bout has been converted to admitting girls to Princeton.

Regrettably, F. Bernard Ward died Dec. 30, 1990. A memorial will follow.

HUBERT A. "RED" SCHMIDT

Bethesda, MD 20814

George Benson suffered a stroke last September which put him in the hospital for a week followed by three weeks in a nursing home. His doctors advised against his living alone in his home in Belaire, Fla., so he moved to Laconia, N.H., where he found an apartment near his younger daughter. He dislikes the cold climate of New Hampshire and misses his daily swim in the Gulf. However, he says he is otherwise healthy and gets around. Laconia is not far from Center Sandwich, where Charlie Stevenson lives, so perhaps they can get together. F. E. Smith's granddaughter Heather, who is at Princeton, recently spent six months of her junior year in Australia. The Ed Linvilles spent several weeks in January and February in Antigua where they were visited by their two sons (Princeton '66 and '68) and their four grandsons. Many of you are now living in retirement communities. Apparently it's the in thing, like driving a B.M.W. Anyway, your secretary has decided to bite the bullet and move into one which is being built in Gaithersburg, Md., just outside of Washington, and which will be ready for occupancy in the fall. As a widower with emphysema he finds it too difficult to cope with two houses, one in Bethesda, Md., and another on the Eastern Shore. He came to this decision reluctantly but circumstances compelled it.

Our 61st reunion will be held June 7 and 8 at Cloister Inn on Prospect Street. Don Dimars has made all the arrangements and a letter setting forth the details is in the mail. We look forward to a good attendance. Al Covolo has already announced his intention to attend. In February, Al had his 88th birthday, which makes him the oldest living member of the Class.

With sorrow we report the deaths of Casper Hegner Jan. 27 and of Eldridge Keith Jan. 31, 1991.

It has been reported that the '31 Secretary has been confined to the infirmary for a month during some interior restoration. For a portly '31er to lose weight is always good news. When Carter asked Reagan how he kept so young looking, he replied that all he did was ride older and older horses.

Marlene Dietrich was persuaded to make a film much later in her career. She agreed provided her former photographer did the shooting. When she saw the "rushes," she was horrified and asked why she looked so old and wrinkled. "You must understand, Miss Dietrich," the photographer said, "I'm now 25 years older."

Next time we hope to have more interesting Class news.

We regret to report the deaths of "Tap" Wood, and of A. George Bidler Jr. We have memorials in this issue.

MATLAND A. EDEY

New York, NY 10128

This snapshot of Laurie Rockefeller and our Prexy, Jim Rowbotham, flanked by V.P. Jack Kellogg and Jere Lord, was taken during the festivities honoring Laurie's receipt of the Woodrow Wilson Award. His acceptance speech in Alexander Hall, was received with rapt attention, according to the ALUMNI WEEKLY, as he reminisced about his life as a Princeton student, venture capitalist, environmentalist, and philanthropist. Laurie spoke softly and modestly, but he had his audience in the palm of his hand.

Don't Forget—59th Reunion—June 7-8

Most of us, when we connect '32 with Hollywood, think instantly of Jimmy Stewart and the fabulous career he has had there. But another man, in a quieter corner of the Hollywood scene, has had just as distinguished a career. He is Bill Reynolds, who has edited 68 major Hollywood films. Five of them have been nominated for Academy Awards: FANNY; THE SAND PEBBLES; HELLO, DOLLY; THE GODFATHER; and THE TURNING POINT. Two others copped the award itself: THE SOUND OF MUSIC and THE STRING. Recently Bill's work was recognized by the American Cinema Editors, who gave him their Career Achievement Award in tribute to 50 years of distinguished service.

John Hawes went for 14 years with a hip replacement, and recently sprang for the 1990 new model, which works perfectly. That stimulated his wife Judith to have one too. She is now "more difficult than ever to keep up with."

ARTHUR MOODY
600 E. Cathedral Rd., Apt. A314
Philadelphia, PA 19128

This is the time for all classmates to think about reunions: first, June Reunions, June 6-9, at the Graduate College lawn, with the Class of '36 as hosts, celebrating their 55th. Come and march over the new P-rade route. Second, the mini-reunion planned for Sky Top next Oct. 15-17. By now you should have received Frank Townsend's communication with the details. The place and date are auspicious: a site conveniently located for all classmates in the Northeast and Middle Atlantic, not too remote from the Midwest and South, and, we hope, attractive enough to draw from the West. A time when the migration from Florida and elsewhere is complete.

The request in this column for information about continuing care retirement communities has brought some response: Jim McIlroy says that they have moved from Pittsburgh to Kachina Point Retirement Village, Sedona, Ariz. Not continuing care, but with a nursing home nearby. He says: "Come and see us."

Dick Leopold has moved into a life-care retirement residence in downtown Evanston: the Georgian. Frank Spencer has moved to Kimball Farms, Lenox, Mass. No other Tigers. Williams and Amherst mostly.

June LaMotte, Fritz's widow, has moved to Stonegate, near Wilmington, where the Andy Smiths and Lovlands live.

Lois Baxter, Ralph's widow, lives at Village-on-the-Green, Longwood, Fla., near Orlando. She says moving there was one of the best decisions they ever made.

Don't forget Curly Marsb and Annual Giving, if you have not already responded.

IN MEMORIAM: Arch Brooks died on Mar. 16, at Midlothian, Va.

RALPH K. FITCH

Princeton, NJ 08540

Gene Gerbart was honored in January by the N.Y. State Bar Assn.'s House of Delegates "in grateful recognition of his 30 years of dedicated and outstanding service as editor-in-chief of the N.Y. STATE BAR JOURNAL." Gene was given a standing ovation; an eyewitness says, "I thought the applause would never cease!"

Doug Hahn, president of the Princeton Assn. of Monmouth and Northeast Ocean Counties (N.J.) for more than eight years, was asked to continue, on the ground that no one is available to succeed him. Doug's response was characteristic; he said he would continue as president of the association (of 460 members) "until somebody turns up who wants a full-time job at no pay (an exaggeration)."

Fred Hamilton, who has been treasurer of the Noah Webster Foundation and Historical Society of West Hartford, Conn., for the past 17 years, was honored for his contributions at the society's annual meeting. Fred is retiring from the job and has been elected the institution's first trustee emeritus. The exhibition gallery in the museum was dedicated to him and will now be known as the Frederick Warner Hamilton Gallery. (The Noah Webster House, where Fred and Jane and their two children lived from 1939-60, was formerly owned by Fred's mother, who donated it to the town in 1962).

Van van Dyle was honored last fall in Rehoboth Beach, Del., as one of the founders of the local Y.M.C.A. more than ten years ago. A campaign to raise funds for the construction of a new Y facility is underway with a goal of $2 million.

Some class!

We have a memorial in this issue.

FIFTY-SIX. The faithful will assemble with the Class of 1936 at the Graduate College on Fri., June 7, for '35's 56th reunion. The Class dinner that night will be at the nearby country home of Elsa and Henry Patton.

HALF RETIRED. After 22 years in N.Y.C. at Wildenstein & Co., international art dealers, Harry Brooks has abdicated his position as president and now works only three days a week, carefully arranged so that he enjoys four-day weekends. He and Holly live in Glen Head, N.Y. . . . Ed Brisach has given up his solo practice of law to become "of counsel" to his firm in Garden City, Long Island. He and Virginia live only three blocks from the office.

SCUDDER PLAZA. Construction of Princeton's new economics, politics, and public policy complex next to the Woodrow Wilson School on Prospect Street has been made possible, in part, by a substantial gift from Dick and Ned Scudder. In recognition of their generosity, the University at a dedication ceremony on May 10 named the building's entryway "Scudder Plaza" in honor of their father, Edward W. Scudder '03.

Years ago the Scudder brothers were involved in the management of the Newark Evening News, a family-owned newspaper which they sold in 1970. Dick then founded and became chairman of the Garden State Paper Co., a producer of recycled newspaper, and the publisher of a string of small daily newspapers. Ned shifted his management talent to radio broadcasting and cable communications. Both are active in numerous civic organizations, including the Paper Mill Playhouse in Millburn, New Jersey's official state theater, which their aunt, Antoinette Scudder, founded in 1934 and which they both have served as V.P. Dick lives in Navesink near the N.J. shore; Ned lives in Lake Placid, N.Y., but winters in Delray Beach, Fla.

IN MEMORIAM. Edgar T. McCormick of Fords, N.J., July 20, 1914—March 12, 1991. The Class has memorials in this issue.

JAMES G. BENSON
24 Aylesbury Cir., Windemere
Madison, CT 06443

Fit and trim! Seen above in February at La Jolla, Calif., are visitor Bill White and V.P. John Paul Jones.

Plans are being completed for our 55th. Attendance List #3 includes: Chapman, Cutler, Hawks, Hummel, Lee, Mason, McCracken, Meigs, Parrott, J. West, Winters, Del Essentier, and Virginia Cluett. Carl Peterson of St. Croix continues his tradition of assembling our Class engineers at major Class reunions.

We review the comprehensive article in the Mar. 20 PAW on our Betty Constable. She is retiring after 20 years as head coach of Princeton's women's squash team with a tremendous record of 167 wins and only 19 losses, this being the highest winning percentage of any coach in the University's history. A former national champion, as were her mother, Margaret Howe, and twin sister, Peggy, her undefeated team (7-0) this past spring for the twelfth time won the Howe Cup, the symbol of the Intercollegiate Squash Assn.'s team championship. She has coached eight undefeated teams and seven of the last 11 national individual champions. A magnificent record, Betty!

Col. Roger Willock U.S.M.C. (Ret.) of Cumberland Foreside, Me., as a noted maritime historian, plays a unique role for the Maine Maritime Museum at Bath in the documentation of power vessels that have had histories on the Maine coast and the shores of the Great Lakes. Roger has published four books and numerous articles on naval and military topics and is a frequent lecturer. He also acts as an adviser to the Bermuda Historical Monuments Trust and serves as a volunteer at the emergency room of the Maine Medical Center. What a busy retirement!

We have recently talked with Junie Dodge and Sid Sillock, who are recovering nicely from recent poor health.

We have memorials in this issue.

Don't forget our Nifty 54th, June 6-9. We'll miss you if you're not there, so send in your card now. Call

John Eberhardt if you have questions: 609-883-4851.

Fran Jacobs retired last Jan. 31, being able to sell his pediatric practice (which, alas, an individual lawyer can't do). There was a wonderful article in the Philadelphia INQUIRER as to the event, harking back to starting practice when the field of pediatrics was brand new, penicillin had just been introduced, and polio was epidemic. For a run-down on his offspring (assuming the correct deciphering of a doctor's handwriting): Frannie and Pat's Francis III is a freshman at Ohio-Wesleyan, Harrison a senior at Haverford School, Mary in eighth grade at Shipley; Peter and Alix's son Alexander a freshman at Episcopal Academy and stepson Sean teaching English in Japan; daughter Jane and husband Siegfried have their two adopted boys from Calcutta: Eric (6) and Jan (4), and their own Matthew (2½); daughter Jorie is now a V.P. II at Chase Manhattan in Wilmington and husband Willem a talented pianist and cabinet maker.

Other January news was Frank Taplin's joining the Czech pianist Rudolf Firkusny playing (4 hands) the Dvorak Slavonic Dances at the Czech Embassy in Washington at a reception organized by the Washington Chapter of the Czechoslovak Society of Arts and Sciences, for the Federation of Political Prisoners of Czechoslovakia, to benefit those who had suffered during the 40 years of communist rule. Julie and Penn Kimball attended.

Tap also foregathered Alumni Day with his Peggy and Brad Cochran, Ruth and Jerry Congleton, Carl Ferenbach, Dave Foster, Sally Graham (now moved to Princeton), Ken Mann, and Ben Poole.

More 50th wedding anniversary celebrations: Sarah and Bob Adamson last June 28 with a host of friends they've known since 1940, and Lucia and Jim Parker last March 29, "a delightful and rewarding half-century."

Nick Larzelere died Mar. 2, 1991. A memorial will follow. We have memorials in this issue.

Harlan Cleveland has been appointed president of the World Academy of Art and Science, effective Jan. 1, 1991, for five years. He and Lois commute between Minnesota and the big island of Hawaii, managing two two-month stays on the island per year. He continues writing on world affairs, having had published by Aspen Inst. THE GLOBAL COMMONS: POLICY FOR THE PLANET last year and has at least one more book in the writing. He avoids having spare time by doing a fortnightly newspaper column and lecturing worldwide about leadership and international politics at the drop of an invitation.

Fran Rulon-Miller writes that daughter Francie has passed all requirements and is a fireman in Colorado. Son-in-law Fred Upton, married to Amy, was re-elected congressman from Michigan last fall.

Guido Gores cannot shake the habit of going to the office five days a week even though he retired from his work as chief investment officer of First-Third Bank of Cincinnati eight years ago. He continues his dedication to worthy causes, among them the Cincinnati Foundation for the Aged and Beechwood Home for Incurables, where his financial expertise is deemed invaluable.

Mary Leah and Louis Gray celebrated their golden wedding last August with a preview party in Norfolk, Va., organized by the Mike Lazarons with Lathrop Bisbon and John Rudd among the guests. The actual date was observed at the church of their wedding in Pertopolis, Brazil with the entire family in attendance.

Our sympathy to Brad Craig, whose wife, Margaret, better known as Margot, died in Bennington, Vt., Dec. 30, 1990. She supervised the Orange Key Guide Service when Brad was director of Student Aid at Princeton. Two sons, John and Thomas, also survive.

We regret to report the death of Vance O. Carbanan Dec. 18 and of Ian M. Hunter Mar. 5. Memorials will appear later.

Chico Graham and Jim Clarendon, good friends as undergraduates, hadn't met for 52 years until February in Austin, Tex. Jim and Dottie had flown in to spend time with her mother, so Chico and Jane drove over from Bandera for what Chico called The Great Renewal. Chico keeps in touch by letter and phone with Bardusch, Brookings, Baches, and Frank Earle, and with "erratic regularity" sees Ike Kampmann for tennis in San Antonio. But he wishes more classmates would let him know when they're coming into south Texas: "I'll meet them anywhere within a couple hundred miles. In Texas that's no trouble."

Mid-winter Alumni Day saw our Class once again with the largest turnout: 51 classmates, wives, and widows, joined by a few of our undergraduate Fox Fund grantees. Earle Holsapple represented our Class at the Service of Remembrance honoring our 14 classmates who died in 1990, among them Apple's roommate Moose Cables.

Jean and Layng Martine celebrated their 50th in November with a wonderful trip to Ireland. Ann and Art Gillies celebrated their 49th in Delray at a gala black-tie dinner-dance attended by Joan and Johnny Bell, Leni and John Gorman, Helen and Ed Hobler, and Carl Toubey.

By now you've received a letter from Bob Sullivan and Ernie Dale telling all you need to know to persuade you to be with the best old Class of all for Reunions, June 7-9, when we celebrate our 52nd. As their letter says, "Princeton in June is good for what ails you and surely by now something does." Come one, come all.

With sorrow we report the deaths of Landis Gores and Russ Mueller. We have memorials in this issue.

This picture of (l-r) Ivy DeFriez, Grook Fuller, and Yah Yardley thoroughly relishing the excitement and exhilaration of our 50th reunion is a timely reminder that our 51st will soon be upon us. Reunion Chairman Buzzer Boozan has the program well in hand, with the Class dinner scheduled for Friday evening, June 7, at the Nassau Club. Additional details will be in your mail. Remember also this is a grand opportunity to renew friendships and ties with the Class of 1941, which will be celebrating its 50th.

Our distinguished retired news commentator Dallas Townsend, when asked for his thoughts on the Gulf War reporting by his Sarasota, Fla. newspaper, responded, "I think the critics have a narrow view of what a journalist's job is . . . Of course the reports were censored, but as long as they were labeled that way, I see no problem." Dallas is lecturing locally on media topics and is active in Sarasota cultural events.

Fran Kellogg is undertaking a "Pittsburgh Green Memorial Project" in a field which Fitz understood well—conservation and the need for balance between nature and technology. Those interested in making a contribution to the project should contact Fran directly for further information.

We regret to announce that Ed Hubbard died Jan. 18, 1991; Marty Vogel Mar. 3; and Pete Forsch Mar. 25. Memorials are being prepared.

This column had to be mailed to PAW April 6, at which time 219 men, 165 wives, and 9 widows are signed on for the 50th. Another dozen classmates plus uncounted progeny will probably come. Add to the list Barton, Brightman, Bross, L. H. Brown, Bruenner, Busch, Carmichael, Carothers, Chapman, Chester, Chubb, Copeland, *C. K. Also Edie Richardson, Debby Scammell, Moyra Schroeder, Anita Stewart, Bettie Stockton, and Alice Wingerd. Dinner dancing all three evenings, some of it to Buddy Morrow's TOMMY DORSEY ORCHESTRA. No orations!

1941 will host 1912's 79th reunion at Forbes. They gave their own permanent HQ to Princeton many years ago. It will be our honor to greet Arthur C. Holden F.A.I.A. '12 P'41 in the 101st year of his life, and a few of 1912's extended tiger family.

Early report of the spring mini-reunion (combined with Princeton Today) April 4-6 has arrived from Bob Carton, who caught Jack Nevius and Bob Lowry taking a break from the heavy schedule. Louise and Bill Bingham's full report of the event will be in '42 News, which should be in your hands by now. For the record: 45 '42ers were there.

Ned Page, not heard from in a while, brings us up to date: "Recently I completed my year as senior warden of Saint John's Episcopal Church in Franklin, Mass. It was a fulfilling year and my first experience with that position. I'm still working full-time as a registered professional engineer doing a number of jobs for clients in air and water pollution control and serving on several state committees. Some of our classmates have been generously supporting the Boston Guild for the Hard of Hearing of which I have been first V.P. and am up for nomination as president, having served five years in that capacity already. Along with our older daughter, Barbara, I'm a member of the U.S. Rowing Assn. and row annually in the Head of the Charles in Cambridge—fun! Also continuing to run but not able to keep up with our younger daughter Carol (45) who has done very well in the women's masters Class in Maine. My good wife, Barbara, and I are now living in Chestnut Hill, Mass., and spending weekends in Millis—and tolerating all of this activity!"

Wondering when your note on dues or A.G. flap is to see print? A batch of the former arrived recently from treasurer Lowry. 42 News devoured them all.

Twenty-three people, including wives and children, attended '43's mini-reunion in Naples, Fla., March 4-6. Shown in the accompanying photo are: Frank Crawford, Margo Essertier, Dave Headley and Ginnie, Dick Osann, Gene Wetmore and Sue, John Sheperdson, Ted Van Buren, Ned Carpenter, Li and Dave Peaslee, Ed Essertier, Bob Oakleaf and Libby. Not shown are Helen and Dick Guile; Anne, Sue and Bob Perina; Jane Van Buren, Sally Van Buren Schramm and Bob Schramm. The '43 contingent was invited to meet other Princetonians in the area at the annual gulfside cocktail party of P.C. of S.W. Florida, hosted by Sid and Ann Combs. The participants were enthusiastic to repeat in Naples next year, so the date has already been set for March 9-11 (Mon-Wed.), 1992. Thanks to P.C.S.W.F. Prez Ted Van Buren, this also encompasses their cocktail party.

Further details in a planned September Class Newsletter; watch for it. In addition, an interim Class Newsletter is in the works between now and then. Watch for that, too!

Short takes: From Bruce Bradway, "Writing for newsletter 'Communications Briefings,' still teach math at Glassboro State Univ. in NJ. Had fifth grandchild last September." A warm ALOHA came to the secretary recently from Al Wheeler: "Last November in Waikiki, Dick Waterman and I met with ex-roomie George Oliva and friend Bill McCoy '45 as they stopped in Honolulu after trip to the Orient. We decided we were all relatively well-preserved!" Al's new address is P.O. Box 88066, Honolulu, HI 96830; 808-293-1669. Peg and Dave Bowen traveled through Holland and Germany for ten days via tandem bicycle! Lotta legwork, that.

Those of us out in the boonies tend to miss some of the "big paper" stories. So it was that the James A. Hogue, alias Alexi Indris-Santana, gaffe at Princeton arrived only thanks to John Ware. It was preceded by the hilarious bit out of the Mar. 19 SMITHSONIAN magazine by James Nelson on Dave Henderson, son of Eli, '43. Yeates posted me that honey followed two days later by the same from Chet Rice. The latter skillfully wove the elusive Henderson into a seafood get-together at the Rice house, attended by Marty and Ray Dykema, Betty and Joe Fox, Mia and Botts Alexander. Joe is still working at Bechtel, and Botts, retired from Chevron, continues teaching aspiring softrock geologists at U.C.—Berkeley. All look disgustingly healthy. Ray had hoped to bring along Dave Henderson, but the Chacun yachtsman was hung up with U.S. Customs in S.F. (Photo and column copy lost in mails. This via FAX.) Writing of yachtsmen, Hank Cooper and his 50-foot ketch PALMYRA appeared in the June 1990 edition of SAIL magazine in an article by Norris Hoyt that stirs the admiration and envy of anyone who nurtures even a mild interest in boats, particularly sailboats. For those of you who enjoy the "well done" of yachting and missed the Hoyt article, head for a library that maintains yachting mags and savor what Henry and his mate, Terry, have built and sailed 17,000 nautical miles to Palmyra and back and now cruise along the Atlantic shores of North America. Henry is currently the on-scene President of Able Marine Services, Trenton, Me., commuting on weekends to his home in Marblehead, Mass. . . . Former Class President Bob Brown opened '44's midwinter lunch at the P.C.N.Y. with a warm message from honorary classmate Pete Carli; the Villanova matchup was yet to be. 32 good guys and a girl, Tracey Griffinger Nelson '77, Ted's daughter, heard our V.P. Ware discuss the '44 benches (Apr. 17 PAW) and a mini '92 Bermuda reunion with Gresley aid. Also proposed was making next year's lunch into a dinner with wives and '45. Karl Harr, featured speaker, had everyone's ear on his Washington world of a troubled C.C.C.P. and Bush's opportunity to make things happen here at home. Space won't permit attendee's names.

Classmates with children or other relatives who participated in the Persian Gulf conflict are requested to inform the column, so that we can acknowledge with gratitude. First to check in is Jack Murmane, whose son, John III, served as a Navy doctor in Fleet Hospital 5, part of Stormin' Norman's Saudi operation.

Herewith an update from the Nov. 9, 1988 column reporting on the activities of former prexy Wai Stewart with his beloved Nassoons. The Nassoons celebrated their 50th anniversary on Sat., Apr. 6, in Alexander Hall with an impressive, nostalgic concert. Wai is first president of the newly formed Princeton Nassoons Alumni Assn., which, appropriately enough, is headquartered at the Nass in the basement next to the beer taps.

Faithful readers of this column have repeatedly noted the exotic annual role played by Don Durgin as a participant in the Bob Hope Classic at Palm Springs. Once again Don participated on the Indian Wells course and as usual did quite well under the tutelage of professional Dave Edwards. Their foursome finished three off the pace. Of note this year is that Don was joined by Bob Sartorius. Sodie reports that his foursome did not fare nearly so well as Don's, but he and Jonny enjoyed the chance to reune with easterners Catherine and Don. Bob and Jonny had only to drive over to Indian Wells from their Rancho Palos Verdes home. Sodie, incidentally, reports that he is a scratch golfer, by virtue of recording all the good scores and scratching out all the bad ones.

Last-minute Reunions tennis players (doubles or mixed) call Carroll Howe immediately at 1-800-347-7121 to sign up.

A sample of those returning for Reunions are:

Barry, Bailey, Battle, Bixby, Block, Brown, Buck, Campbell, Charlesworth, Coward, Crecca, Del Deo, Delano, Elsaesser, Eversbade, Faxson, Flinn, Gillespie, Good, Gordon, Hackney, Hall, Hawke, Hess, Hunter, Hutchinson, Johnson, Judge, Kimball, Larmett, Lobrie, Massey, Merrill, Metcalf, Miller, Moore, Morgan, Oellers, Palmer, Pellatt, Quiggle, Robertson, Rose, Ryan, Sargent, Schibener, Schoeffler, Scott, Smith, Stumpf, Thomson, Tily, Todd, Totten, Varn, Welsb, Willis.

This is only a partial list, but it gives some idea to those on the fence that they should get off it. Call Bob Donovan at 201-768-4235 and sign up. Some will be coming from the farthest points in our nation and from overseas. Certainly, all in states adjacent to N.J. should be counted in our number.

On a mini-scale, Herm Proeb writes from La Jolla that he recently had a '46 threesome at Rancho Santa Fe with Gus Supplee and Sy Warner. "Gus and Sy are easterners," he writes, "and in sunny California they feel as if they had died and gone to heaven." Art Whitcomb says he also stopped in to see Herm Proeb as well as Supplee and Zabe Basley who, he reports, "are all ex-Choaters and who, aside from a little more around the middle and a little less on the top, look just about the same as they ever did." Jean Curran writes from Maryland that he is "working hard on wetland education programs for Environmental Concerns, a non-profit organization." He also keeps up with other Princetonians through a very active Princeton Club of the Eastern Shore. In an interesting note, Chris Criscitello confides that he has a full clinical schedule, including teaching at Tufts University School of Medicine. He is "involved in a project applying techniques of artificial intelligence to the analysis of congestive heart failure." He is also looking forward to a trip to China, where he will have a spell teaching at a hospital in Beijing.

'47's "Never An Off-Year" 44th Commingle with '46, June 7-8

Class secretaries often see double, but '47's case—caused by five pairs of members sharing the same names—may be borderline acute. It's a challenge to differentiate between classmates, to make sure the one just married isn't the other just divorced.

If you think nicknames solve the problem, think again. Both Robert C. Allen and Robert N. Allen like "Bob." The former, A-OK after cancer surgery, is a jogger and clock fancier who serves as custodian of a Unitarian Church antique collection in Scituate. The latter, an environmental engineer with Florida Power & Light, also volunteers for church (L.D.S.) activities.

By the same token, Philadelphian Richard A. Davis and Texan Richard P. Davis each prefers "Dick." The former, known as "First Brother" during the Nancy Davis Reagan era, continues his successful practice of neurosurgery. The latter, retired from the printing biz and relaxing at Lake Conroe, enjoys "civic endeavors and grandchildren-watching."

Nicknames help with John B. Hughes, a.k.a. "Jack," and John E. Hughes, a.k.a. "Ned." Jack takes a sabbatical from teaching romance languages at N.Y.U. for the second term next year, then returns abroad to instruct at N.Y.U.-Madrid from 1992-95. Ned, co-founder of the Commonwealth School in Boston, having retired from teaching English last year, tends to the animals and edits for a local publisher in Deer Isle, Me.

Retirees John K. Scott (Texaco Railway) and John M. Scott (Washington Post) travel a bit, the Californian by unconventional means—locomotive or canal boat—and the D.C. denizen by such standbys as plane and auto. Wouldn't you know: each uses "Jack."

Most column readers recognize William B. Wright's name from frequent mention. "Bill" is the retired Vermont banker who urges us to send Annual Giving checks by June 30. Less familiar is William F. Wright, who deserves more attention. A retired Arizona clergyman, "Wid" has licked chronic fatigue syndrome and again is pursuing his favorite "ologies," ge- and gene-.

Follow our festive troubadour, the trumpet-playing tiger, right to the Bedens Brook Club in the post-card-picturesque Hope-well Valley. That's right; our Fri., June 7 reunion dinner will be at Bedens Brook and festive it will be to gladden every heart. Off-year reunions have their own charm and should be experienced. John Pell is our reunion chairman this year. We will be satellite to '51 for post-prandial merriment and Saturday lunch. With any luck some of those classmates (such as Dick Andrews from King of Prussia) domiciled nearby will show up to renew friendships from way back when. As the years go by we seem to cherish our pals from those halcyon days more and more.

George Whittle is busy preparing his boat for his tenth Bermuda race. He also flies planes and has a very busy urology practice.

Fred Allen has retired himself from Allen Energy in Houston but keeps busy in the petroleum industry as a director of Houston Oil & Refining. Fred has been a trustee of Saint James School (which has gone co-ed in its 149th year) in Maryland for eight years and now will devote even more time to its affairs.

Jim Whitebill reports his heart valve replacement ticks along very nicely. It's just as well as he was responsible for a massive town reunion at Pelham, N.Y. Charlie Price is quite the international traveler, having recently gone round the world on the basis of a Kyoto symposium on productivity. Charlie established some world-class shopping credentials in Hong Kong and Greta caught up with school chums from Nürnberg not seen since the forties.

We have a memorial in this issue.

Join Us at '49's Fun-Filled 42nd June 7-9

Happily retired in Carlsbad, Calif., Toni and Joe

Faucher took a moment to send us a half-page article featuring an interview with '49's Dr. Charles A. Thomas Jr., which appeared in the San Diego Union. Charlie is a molecular biologist, regarded internationally as a brilliant scientist, who, after receiving his Ph.D. from Harvard, has conducted research and taught at Michigan, Johns Hopkins, Harvard Medical School, the Scripps Clinic, and has founded several companies to do scientific research. Here are some of his thoughts, quoted from a very forthright interview:

"Re the environmentalists: "They are mostly well-meaning people concerned about the beauty and cleanliness of the world, but they have taken things too far. They argue that it is the environment which causes cancer, which could not possibly be true. An ordinary diet contains levels of carcinogens 10,000 times higher than what anyone consumes as a result of the run-off from industrial systems." About the role of medicine: "I feel that in medicine and health we have to promote individual responsibility—the medical establishment has not done so. No one can assume the responsibility for someone's health, other than the person himself. Others can only help. The future of American medicine lies in prevention." On his current work: "The object of my research at Pantox is to avoid or seriously put off the acquisition of degenerative diseases and tumors."

Glad to hear from Bob Barton, the "father of sport skiing in West Virginia," who writes: "I was in the hospital with another phlebitis attack, but am okay now, and plan to ski in the morning with fresh powder. After the Governor's Cup Races (which I invented some years ago), I'll be presenting the Anita Love Barton Award to the best West Virginia skier of the year. Also, friends seem to have come up with a Bob Barton Award for the person 'who did the most for skiing in West Virginia.' Planning to be back for Reunions." And from George Mead we hear: "Getting ready with my wife, Simone, to retire from Avis and move to Florida to a new home in Brooksville, north of Tampa, about June 1."

We sadly report that Roy Ellegard died in Naples, Fla., on Mar. 12, 1991. A Class memorial will follow. We have memorials in this issue.

Class dinners—Fine Tower, Friday; Prospect, Saturday. Call Pete Erdman to reserve at 609-924-0623.

Hank Betts, medical director and C.E.O. of the Rehabilitation Inst. of Chicago, is an internationally renowned expert and spokesman for the rights of people with disabilities. Hank's distinguished service has been recognized by the establishment of the Henry Betts Award. The first recipient, selected from over 100 nominees, in receiving her award at the Library of Congress, said that Hank "has shown society that its narrow way of thinking must change in order to benefit from the millions of Americans with disabilities."

Alumni Day in mid-February turned out a good representation of classmates. Among those registered were Charlie Biggs, Pete Buchanan, Tex Lemason, Gordon Loos, Don Maynard, Dave McAlpin, Jack Rathman, Hank Rentschler, Bob Smith, Earl Wheaton, Phil Zabriskie (with his two undergrad children), and Joe Zang. Tom Raleigh's widow, Ann, attended the very moving memorial service with all four children (including Nancy, who took the red-eye from California to be on hand). Tom's stepmother, Helen w'19, known to many of us, was also there. Class Agent Rod Edwards was at the Annual Giving dinner Friday evening, which honored Joe Bolster's retirement as

A.G. office head. Julie Buxton was also around Friday evening after attending trustee meetings, but he had to leave prior to the Saturday luncheon.

Bill Maritz received a leadership award from the St. Louis construction industry in recognition of his cooperation and dedication to cost-effective, high-quality construction. Dick Bray was elected to a second term as director of the Natl. Art Materials Trade Assn. Dick is marketing manager of Faber-Castell in Parsippany, N.J.

If you were a recipient of the dues request letter last month from Treasurer Tex Lamason, please make certain your $40 check has gone to him at 29 Matlack Lane, Villanova, PA 19085. In recent years the Class has consistently been one of the leaders in percentage participation, which has enabled us to provide a variety of services.

More sign-ups roll in: Bill Askin, Bob Bloom, Andy Cobb, Bill Davis, Wen Dietrich, Don Habn, George Hawke, By Hollinshead, Wali Kissinger, Dick Madden, John Mattheus, Peter McKay, David Milbank, Bill Morris, Bill Norris, Vic Rizzi, Paul Schleyer, Dick Snedeker, Bill Tate, Vern Wise, Warren Wittreich.

For more than ten years as a judge on the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Los Angeles, Bill Norris has ruled on some of the country's hottest issues, from the Army's anti-gay regulations to the First Amendment and the Mafia. His proudest achievement, however, is as the founding president of the Los Angeles Museum of Contemporary Art. MOCA was Bill's idea and his hard work made it a reality against daunting odds. The museum reflects his deep interest in contemporary art and sculpture; his private collection is notable.

Warren Wittreich writes, "For personal as well as professional reasons, I have become involved with Friends of Princeton Sobriety, comprising alumni and some parents of current undergraduates. Their purpose is to provide personal, professional, moral, and financial help to the University in its attempt to deal with alcohol abuse on campus. My interest is obviously my being a recovered alcoholic whose private practice is focused on recovery therapy. If POPS's efforts prevent one premature death, that alone will make it all worthwhile."

Bill Waldron's wife, Shiela, died early this past March.

Peyton Weary received the gold medal of the American Academy of Dermatology for his career-long service in that field at U.Va. This highest award of the academy has been given only ten times in the past 30 years. Peyton will retire this June as chairman of the U.Va. Dept. of Dermatology, but will continue to be active on the faculty and in a number of national organizations. Grandchild number six is on the way for Peyton and Janet to spoil in their usual style.

At a time when many classmates are retiring or lightening their load, Bob Doberty has taken on a bigger challenge. Early this year, he and several partners bought out the original founder of McKinney & Silver, the Raleigh, N.C., advertising agency where Bob has been president and chief operating officer for several years. Now he is chief executive officer of a firm with close to $100 million in billings from nine choice clients.

Bill Nicely is another classmate with a bigger job, having been elected chairman, president, and C.E.O. of Callahan Mining Corp. this February. Bill has been 20 years with the company, which has mining, manufacturing, and oil and gas interests and is listed on the N.Y. Stock Exchange.

Bob Cowen retired about 18 months ago and moved to the resort community of Fairfield Glade, Tenn., on the Cumberland plateau, where the golfing is good all year round. Bob's life is enlivened by seven grandchildren.

Gil Dunham is another recent retiree, after 35 years with Johnson & Higgins in N.Y.

Dick Kazmaier served on the recent Knight Foundation Commission which recommended sweeping reforms in college athletics in the U.S.A.

Roger Kirk served as chairman of a recent study group organized by the Atlantic Council of the U.S. to recommend future U.S. policy toward Romania, where Roger served as U.S. ambassador several years ago.

I regret to report that John Blewer died of cancer Apr. 7 at his home in Salt Lake City.

Mini Reunion Philadelphia—Oct. 18-20

While promoting our mini-reunion, we are not intending to slight our glorious 38th this June 6-9. As is our custom, we will be gathering for cocktails and dinner at the home of a local classmate. The venue has not been firmed up, but Fred Crispin will be getting out a mailing shortly. This year we will be a satellite class of 1951 at their 40th.

A recent note from Steve Paliska in California informs that he is laboring mightily with Newport Engineering Consultants. Most of his work is industrial, including military facilities, the L.A. TIMES, Seattle TIMES, and the Calif. Dept. of Corrections. In addition, he is involved with joint ventures in both Atlanta and Washington, D.C.

The turnaround in the fortunes of the men's lacrosse team continues as the Tigers are, at this writing, one of the top-ranked teams in the nation. In a 17-8 victory over Yale, freshman Kevin Lowe registered nine assists, tying a school record set in 1953 by our own all-American Bo Willis.

If you are down in Tar Heel country, go over to Greensboro and take a look at the U.N.C.G. campus. The person who pushed through $85 million in improvements over his 12-year tenure is Chancellor Bill Moran. At Princeton, Bill was struck with the "intellectual elegance" of the institution and he has given an elegance and excellence to all parts of U.N.C.G. creating a buzzing, modern magnet for the brightest students around. A former basketball player, Bill realized one of his dreams when he moved the U.N.C.G. basketball program into NCAA Division I. He has an M.B.A. from Harvard and a Ph.D. from Michigan and years of solid experience in educational administration at major universities. Still... bottom line... his heart belongs to Old Nassau.

Nancy and Noah Herndon helped establish the Carroll School for dyslexic children in Boston in 1969. They have been key supporters for 22 years, giving generously of their time, talent, and finances. The school is a great success, and a dinner was organized in Noah's honor sponsored by a distinguished group, including some well known Boston Tigers: Hooker Talcott, Bud Page, Stokley Towles '57, Art Bond '55 and Mr. Heisman himself, Dick Kazmaier '52. Tony Spano's attractive daughter Marion '89 was married in Fairfax, Va. recently. Tony is an actuary with the American Council of Life Insurance, a trade association in Washington. He just completed a six-year term as an officer and board member of the Society of Life Actuaries.

Many of you have had the privilege of hearing Marty Hoffmann on guitar playing bluegrass tunes. He tells a great story musically with flawless timing. With those creative genes flowing, it's no surprise that Cecil (Heidi) Hoffmann '84 has become a very accomplished actress. You can catch her on Thursday nights starring in L.A. Heidi worked hard, paid her dues, and hit the jackpot with a three-year contract in the hottest show in television.

Our sister institution on the banks of the Charles River in Cambridge pulled off a major coup when it snatched Neil Rudenstine away from the Mellon Foundation to be its president, succeeding Derek Bok. With Neil at Harvard and honorary classmate Harold Shapiro here at Princeton, the Class of 1956 now includes the presidents of two-thirds of the Big Three. Benno Schmidt, eat your heart out!

One of the great eccentrics of American history was Alfred W. Lawson, a big-league ballplayer, pioneer aviator, social reformer, religious guru, and self-proclaimed genius. Lawson's story has now been told in a biography published by Univ. of Iowa Press, ZIG-ZAG-AND-SWIRL: ALFRED W. LAWSON'S QUEST FOR GREATNESS, by Lyell Henry. Lyell has lived with Lawson's astonishing story for quite a few years, and now he has brought it forth whole. One reviewer has written, "All students of outrageous humbug will be indebted to Lyell Henry for a difficult job well done."

John Detjens's wife, Stephanie, has sent us news ("John will never get around to this") of their 20 years in Oregon, where John is a partner in the Portland law firm of Stoel, Rives, Foley Jones & Grey. Bob's six years as the Chicago Board Option's Exchange will serve him well in his new endeavor.

Lucille and Bob Hornby's daughter Lucy was admitted to the Class of 1995. She is a senior at Stuart Country Day School and, among other honors, is a Natl. Merit finalist.

Alex Netchvolodoff, aide and "alter ego" to Senator Jack Danforth for 22 years, has been elected V.P.-government affairs for Cox Enterprises, which owns 17 daily newspapers, 24 cable television systems, and 21 television and radio stations. The mayor of St. Louis characterized Netch as "one of the best public servants Missouri has ever had . . . a man of great integrity, shrewd in the art of politics for the public benefit . . . wise, cool, and persistent." When asked why he was leaving his position with Jack Danforth, Netch commented, "Every old plant needs a new pot from time to time."

John Saubill recently spoke at the Irvine Nature Center in Baltimore about the Nature Conservancy. In the audience were Dale and Bill Balfour and Marion and Ralph DeGross.

Jan Holmquist managed last year to get Plácido Domingo to endorse Our Little Brothers and Sisters, a group of Latin-American orphanages. Jan also recently completed his 75th one-piano, four-hand recital.

Class Dinner—June 8, 1991

Len Epstein is into the "mom and pop" thing on a high-tech scale. He and wife, Sue, are running Spektragrafika, a computer-graphics business, in Atlanta, Ga. Len describes their husband-wife management team as "harmonious," and wonders if other classmates have had similar experiences. Len's son, Jonathan '88, has returned from two years in Japan and is now with Proctor & Gamble. His son Brian '90 is at Oxford for two years studying philosophy.

Mark Birnbaum is also into high-tech, having taken a new position with Cadence Design Systems, Inc., as program manager for the company's partnership arrangement with Mitsubishi. Cadence develops and sells computer-aided design software used for microchip and printed circuit board design.

Susan and Ed Houbert participated in "Spring Break in Grosse Point" (Mich.), by hosting a no-alcohol 17th wedding anniversary party on Apr. 27. The community designated the Apr. 26-28 weekend as alcohol-free as a way for adults to show young people that it is possible to have a good time without alcohol. The idea originated with Grosse Pointe high school students in 1989.

TIGER CUBS: Michael Cape's son, David '87, wed Victoria Barrow Burns '87 on Oct. 14, 1990; Mike's youngest son, Robert, is in the Class of 1993. Frank Slattery has managed a grand-slam: son Quint, an early-admittee to the Class of 1995, joins Mary '86, Sara '90, and Julie '92. Walt Whitmoyer's daughter, Jolie, is also an early-admittee to '95's ranks. Walt's son, William, graduated from Kenyon College in May 1990; son Toby is a sophomore at Hamilton College. Gil Curtis entered the grandchildren race with a total of two—Jack and Emily—both thanks to his daughter Laura '82.

Pictured here are Dan Keules, who teaches history at CalTech, and our Senator Kit Bond, of Missouri, who makes history in Washington. Kit was featured speaker at the N.Y. Annual Class Dinner on Apr. 15. Recent news stories include a WALL STREET JOURNAL report that the Continental Bank Corp., Chicago, has designated the firm of Mayer, Brown & Platt to handle work that was being done in house under the leadership of Richard Brennan, who was general counsel. Richard moves back to Mayer, Brown with some 45 lawyers, to a partnership he left years ago to go to Continental, where he supervised a legal department with some 135 lawyers.

The N.Y. TIMES carried a story about A. Frederick Gerstell, the president and C.E.O. of the Calmat Co., a large construction materials concern based in Los Angeles. Fred has been named to the additional post of chairman of the board of Calmat. Fred was also president of the Calmat predecessor company, the California Portland Cement Co., which merged in 1984 with Conrock Co. to form Calmat. In case you need to order some of the following materials at a discount to classmates, Calmat is concentrating on its core business of asphalt, ready-mix concrete, and construction aggregate, which is the sand and gravel or crushed stone used as a road base and in the mixing of asphalt. Calmat is also a large landholder in the West. The company collects the aggregate from the land and later sells the property to developers. Fred lives in L.A. with his wife, Joan Lavery Foley, and their six grown children. Andrea Gerstell graduated from Princeton in 1986. Daughters Alison and Daphne graduated from Connecticut College.

Apologies to Lynn Adelman for our misidentifying him two columns ago (and thanks to Bob Ochser for spotting the error). Speaking of Ox, he and 32 other classmates, plus ten spouses and guests, heard Tom Wright '62's interesting report on the University at our midwinter Class dinner on Mar. 7 in N.Y. Present were: Andreus, Berton, Bjorkholm, Brakeley, Brennan, Chapman (who has chaired the dinner all 14 years), Ely, Georgescu, Greenwood, Haines, Hitz, Hlafter, and Horn. Also Krongard, Iseman, Johnston, Kellogg, Kurtin, Loud, McAuliffe, MacMurray, Michel, Norton, Ochser, Parsons, Pettibone, Poole, Praiber, Scasserra, Somers, Stanger, Wickenden, and Wurmfeld.

Our Themeless Thirtieth is really picking up steam. No time like now to sign up—if you can't find the registration papers, fax a note to Brakeley (fax number above). P-race chief Jim Hunter needs marshalls and cheerleaders, call him at 703-528-0090. Food/liquor chairman Stanger says there'll be a pig roast Thursday night, so plan to come early. Whatever, BE THERE.

"N.G.A." is the University's acronym for "no good address." Three N.G.A.s surfaced recently—Marron Fort, now living in Germany, Nick Joubousky, missing since 1970, and now a professor of English at Penn State., and John Lopez, absent since 1976, and now living in Wilmington, Del. Another interesting change-of-address indicates that Brice Cox, formerly a San Antonio banker, is now the Reverend Brice Cox and is living in Canyon Lake, Tex. Finally, we've received notice that John Blake died in 1965; we have no details.

KAWABUNGA!—Jim Fisber, professor of anthropology at Carlton, celebrated his half-century mark last summer by: 1) going up in a hot-air balloon; 2) running two miles in 11 minutes, 40 seconds; 3) with son, climbing Alaska's Denali (Mt. McKinley to the rest of us) at 20,306 feet; 4) with wife and daughter, climbing Mt. Whitney in California at 14,494 feet; 5) publishing from U.C. Press-Berkeley, SHERPAS: REFLECTIONS ON CHANGE IN HIMALAYAN NEPAL, with foreword by Sir Edmund Hillary; and 6) jumping out of an airplane (with parachute, of course). "I remain curious about other weekend life-threatening activities, but eschew bunji jumping as too mindless."

Born to Grant Brownrigg, our cartoonist, and his wife Judy, their first child, a son, Carter Grant Brownrigg, on Oct. 31, 1990. "Given the colors of that day, he's destined for either Princeton or Halloween U.I." Grant has two grown children by a previous marriage.

Peter Brown spent "a delightful month" in Princeton last summer on a mathematics fellowship from the Woodrow Wilson Foundation. He was the unofficial guide for the 49 other fellows around campus "that was greatly changed from my undergraduate days. I got lost a couple of times to the great amusement of my colleagues."

Wylie Sheldon, "convinced that San Francisco is underlawyered," returned to private practice last July with Cassidy & Verges, a small firm practicing exclusively in the area of real estate law. Frank Pindyck is president of the medical staff at Huntington Hospital on Long Island. His wife, Suzanne, graduated from Hofstra Law and passed the N.Y. State Bar the first attempt. Eldest daughter Jennifer is finishing her freshman year at Wellesley. Stephanie (15) and Lindsay (12) are at Cold Spring Harbor High School.

You may have noticed an excellent piece in the Mar. 20 PAW about women's squash coaching legend Betty Constable's intercollegiate championship in her final season and that her current number-one player and star for the past two seasons is junior Hope Mackay. Yes, that is indeed Mal's daughter, formerly of St. Paul's School, where she was a national junior champ. Mal's son Rob '89, also a Princeton squash ace, is now in a public health doctorate program at N.Y.U. Mal is denying all rumors that he's been approached by a number of sperm banks.

After nine years as associate dean of the College of Business Administration at the Univ. of Tennessee, Dick Retzenstein will be returning to the school's marketing faculty to pursue teaching and research interests he has had to neglect due to administrative responsibilities. His main focus will be a grant to study the inter-relationships between brands and sales in consumer package goods companies, beginning with Prito-Lay. Dick's daughter Robin will be graduating from Emory Univ. this spring, moving on to a prestigious doctoral program in industrial psychology at Tulane.

Arlyn Lichtbards reports, "Having moved to Mercerville, N.J., I see a lot of old Cannon clubbers. Jerry Asber, Greg Riley, Don Crowley, Vince Hock, Bill Hardt, and I gathered at Bryce Chase's house after the Cornell basketball game to celebrate the Tigers' successful season. Jack Record, Hock, and I joined Dennis O'Toole in Williamsburg, Va., on Apr. 6 for Denny's 50th. Entertainment was by Chuck Berry, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Chubby Checkers!" Univ. of Chicago medical professor Mark Stegler's daughter Dylan, an excellent swimmer and soccer player at the University's Lab School, will be attending Princeton in the fall. And from Seattle, Randy Revulle reports his pride in sending Lisa, his oldest daughter, to Princeton this fall in the Class of 1995. He is working as executive director of the Washington Health Care Commission.

It is with the greatest sadness that I report the death of Barle Dersham in March in N.Y.C.. A memorial will follow.

Hugh MacMillan sent along an amusing photograph taken of Tim Killen and Hugh at a recent Palm Beach Halloween Ball. Obviously feeling no pain, Hugh also sent along a clip from the Palm Beach Post reviewing wife Conni's "stunning performance" in a recent episode of Dr. Oz COURT, spoofing TV evangelists Jim and Tammy Bakker. Our Hugh is now a director and general counsel for the new First National Bank of Lake Park, and young Hugh '94 is rowing on the freshman crew.

Reunion Weekend is June 7-9 and Anne and Dick Henry have graciously volunteered to host cocktails and dinner after the P-rade at Reynolds House on the Lawrenceville School campus, as they did last year. Though Reunions are free for those who register at the 25th Reunion headquarters, there will be a modest per person charge to help cover the dinner costs. Last year's outing was very pleasant for alumni and children alike and we hope you will plan to join us for the day. So that Anne and Dick can make all the necessary arrangements, please let them know you're coming with a call to 609-896-3574.

Lynn Lannon and Jerry Richardson, who attended the 25th Reunion ensemble, were married on March 2 in San Francisco. "After four years or so scratching each other's backs and figuring out how to do so without rubbing the wrong way," wrote Jerry, "we decided to formalize it." The announcement suggested that contributions, in lieu of gifts, be made to the Beyond War Foundation, 222 High Street, Palo Alto, CA 94301.

We have a memorial in this issue.

Further evidence that Harvard has emerged from the Dark Ages and recognized the universal principle that when you've got a big, tough job you get a Princeton grad to do it is the appointment of Hal Clark as the Nomura Professor of International Financial Systems at Harvard Law School, a job he'd had a yen for, or at least a high interest level in, for some time.

Farther south, Dick Brown has just been named general counsel at the Delaware River Port Authority, but says it will leave him time to work on special events for the Class, as to which he invites phone calls or letters of suggestion. Address and phone in the 25th reunion book. And on the Left Coast, Jeff Wong has moved to the San Francisco law firm of Cooper, White & Cooper, although that still leaves him with more ex-wives than ex-law firms. Thanks to Tom Appler for that info.

Corky Kilefoth joins the ranks of those with two offspring in college, with daughter Tanya starting this fall in the study of flute at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, while older sister Karena will be a senior at Smith. The particular ranks that Corky didn't join were those of active Navy Reservists (he's attained the rank of captain now) who were called up for duty, but he did his part to help restart the economy by buying a new car to celebrate the end of the war.

According to an item spotted in the Phillips Exeter BULLETIN by our Argus (the 100-eyed giant who never sleeps) Van Williams, Tom Nasb the head of computing at Fermi National Acceleration Laboratory in Cambridge, Mass., recently gave a speech on "Human-Computer Systems in the Military Context" at the M.I.T. Center for International Studies.

The impressive and extensive list of our offspring now on campus continues: Elizabeth (Tom) Holzer '94, Caroline (Pat) Hu '94, Colin (Karl) Jackson '92, Kristen (Ken) Jensen '93, Eric (Steve) Jordan '92, Hobart (Paul) Kalkstein '92, John (John) Kennedy '94, Anne '91 and Louisa '93 (Dave) Keyes, Lisa (George) Khoury '93, Francis (Prank) Locates '94, Samuel (Sam) Logan '91, Brian (Harlan) Loomis '92, and Emily (Jim) Moren '93.

Twenty-two days from the cover date of this magazine marks the beginning of our "one and only" 25th reunion. It's not too late to make significant plans to be there and join the 800-or-so classmates, significant others, spouses, children, and friends who will be there.

The Class of '66's 25th reunion, like its predecessors, will have a bacchanalian element. As a result of the artful leadership of Turk Thacher, Tiny Morgan, and Tiny's entire committee, our 25th will offer a lot more. A symposium, featuring classmates from a variety of fields, will address the questions we face at mid-life. The results from the joint Princeton-Smith poll, orchestrated by Lanny Jones, will be available. Reconnections with old friends will be made. All of this is available to you, wrapped in the pastoral beauty of a Princeton June.

PIONEERING A NEW ROUTE: In addition to "going back" and looking back, the Class of '66 has the honor of being the first to pass along a new P-rade route. The Route will begin in front of the Presbyterian Church and trace a route, roughly approximating the letter "P," by wrapping around the rear of Nassau Hall, through the Chancellor Green courtyard, turning right to Murray-Dodge, turning right again to Whig and Clío, and then left on Elm Drive through campus to Poe-Pardee Field. The classes will enter the field through a "triumphal arch."

In making the changes, the Alumni Council hopes to shorten the marching time, provide better staging and viewing areas on campus, eliminate the traditional bottlenecks at 1879 arch and Roper Lane, and provide for a more exciting ending to the parade. Let's hope we don't get lost!

From an article in the Harvard Law BULLETIN on visiting professors enriching the curriculum, we have our own Frank Upbam. He is normally a professor at Boston College Law School, and is "working on a comparison of French, Japanese, and American efforts at regulating retailing to protect small and independent merchants." Frank (J.D. '74) has returned to Harvard Law to offer a course on Japanese Legal Documents.

George Bassett sent word that Sonya and Ritchie Getse's son, Justin, is a rising cross-country track star, "a little like-father, like-son." Bill Emley writes that he married Christine Harrison in 1989. They now have a daughter Erin, so he figures to "set a record in our local schools by having children in attendance for 31 years." Near the other end of the education pipeline, David Paul's "daughter Alison (Berkeley '91), who carried the banner at our 10th, is now fencing for Cal and majoring in Psych, in that order. (She really likes fencing)." He is working with Lockheed Environmental Space Systems.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO: Mao launches Cultural Revolution in China. Nasser threatens to invade Saudi Arabia in Yemen dispute. Barcelona police beat 100 priests protesting police brutality. "Monday, Monday" by the Mamas and the Papas tops the charts.

Warren Hoffecker was in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia even before Desert Storm. He can't be much more specific than to tell us that he's involved in internal and external security. Warren (far right) and Andrea Grochol (third from right) have been involved in introducing two new people to the world. Tatiana Alexandra (in doctor's arms, second from right) arrived in 1988 and Nicholas Cesar (in Andrea's arms) in 1990. Warren notes that these names should teach them both how to spell and fight at an early age.

Last month, the Philadelphia Flyers Alumni Ice Hockey Team met at the Princeton Hockey Club All Stars before a capacity crowd in Trenton to raise money for charity. Regan Kerney was the backup Princeton goalie and thought that tending goal against Flyers Alumni like Ed Hospodar and Rick MacLeish would be "an interesting challenge. The dominating performance during the 10-3 Flyers' victory made Regan sober up and remark "it was a little like volunteering to work for General Custer."

Class dinner on Saturday, June 8 in Chancellor Green rotunda—cocktails 5:30, dinner at 6:30. Call Clay McEldowney for details.

FUN FOR FREELoaders: John Hawkins is "living and working in California's Napa Valley. Invite all classmates to stop by Rutherford Hill Winery for a glass of cheer." Meanwhile, when snow next falls, John Tatum notes that he has a "condo at Northstar, near North Lake Tahoe, and plenty of room for skiers."

Harry Robinson has "moved back to our native Cincinnati after 14 years in Houston to put down our roots and see the World Series. Toughest decision was choosing between the private schools whose boards are headed by our own Paul Sittenfeld and Bob Buechner. New career is to grow a private company that makes bonded leather out of leather scrap." Still in Houston is Bill Earle, who reports, "new home for old Princetonian. Come visit."

Living in Milton, Mass., is Paul Mendis, who serves as a regional medical director for the Harvard Community Health Plan and practices internal medicine part-time. His wife Nancy and children Lisa (16), Tanya (9), and Gregory (6), are all well. He notes that he hopes there is "at least one Tiger in the bunch."

One of the trustees of the Independent School Chairmen Assn. is Paul Sittenfeld, and one of the lecturers at its N.Y. luncheon this year was John Pariseau, assistant headmaster for finance and administration at Allen-Stevenson School in Manhattan. The tough topic: "Managing Our Schools in Difficult Times."

SEVENTY CLASS NOTES CENSORED? YOU BE THE JUDGE! Righteous indignation and outrage spew from the Secretary's poison pen over words the High Sheriffs cut from our Apr. 3 column, which reported the annual Class dinner. The omission of the following sent the blood pressure rising: "Class Animal Teri N. Towe was unable to make the event, but thanks to the wonders of modern technology, his voice again graced us with the now familiar Oliver Cromwell Prayer.

The Good Sports of the Evening Award goes to Sandy's fellow surgeon, Dave Hillus, and also to Dr. Norman Scott (a Penn alum) known to many as the orthopedist who rebuilt Bernard King's knee and the lucky person married to our Susan Craig Scott."

Now On To New News: The redoubtable TNT has four stellar chapters in the book CHORAL MUSIC ON RECORD, published by Cambridge Univ. Press, where he discusses Handel and Bach.

Tom Chestnut is the man to see for seats to a Cleveland Cavaliers game. After many years in marketing with P&G, James River, and SportsChannel, he became president of the Cavs and Richfield Coliseum. With Geoff Petrie in a similar position at Portland, and Sue Craig's husband team physician for the Knicks, this gives '70 real access to the N.B.A..

From Jackson Hole, Wyo., comes word that Denris Emory received the coveted(?) title "Most Wanted Bachelor," described as "nice, intelligent, athletic, and involved in his community."

From Exeter Academy comes the very exciting news that a chair in mathematics has been created in honor of Rick Smith's parents.

Ted Esbach and wife Heidi welcomed newborn son Glenn just before Christmas to their home in Harrisburg, Penn.

And finally, we wryly note Bruce Walton (chair of our 15th) reports that he and Nancy are proud parents of William Hunter Walton, born almost exactly nine months after our 20th.

Under the limit with words to spare! So let me tell you the scandal about the classmate who was . . .

STUART E. RICKERSON

Chip Deffaa reports on the happenings of his favorite professor, and honorary member of the Class of '71, Irving Dilliard. Dilliard, Princeton's Ferris Professor of Journalism (emeritus), returned to his Collinsville, Ill., home in 1973 after ten years on the faculty. He was honored in Mar. 1990 by the Collinsville Lions Club as the first recipient of an annual award for exceptional achievement or accomplishment in the community, and specifically "not for holding public office or professional position." As an additional honor, the club announced that the award will bear Dilliard's name.

Before coming to Princeton in 1963, Dilliard was with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch from 1949 until his "retirement" at age 55 in 1960. He was editorial-page editor from 1949 until 1957, during which time he is said to have written some 10,000 editorials for the paper. He retired early, he quips, "because I had done all the damage I could." The paper's publisher, Joseph Pulitzer III, once inquired why Dilliard lived in Illinois rather than in Missouri. He replied that "crossing the Mississippi River twice daily," to work and back, "gave me a national point of view." The river geographically and historically divided the East from the West, and in the Civil War also divided the North from the South. No other editorial writer had this perspective, he proudly adds.

One of Dilliard's projects at the paper was a pamphlet entitled "Building the Constitution." In it, he describes the 1787 constitutional convention through a series of "news dispatches." The pamphlet was distributed free to schools, has gone through 37 printings, and nearly 850,000 copies in print to date. After leaving Princeton, Dilliard was the first director of the Ill. Dept. on Aging, serving in 1974 and 1975.

19TH REUNION DINNER AND PICNIC: On Fri., June 7, the Class will have cocktails and dinner at Valerie and Bill Sharpstone's house in Lawrenceville (3520 Lawrenceville Rd., immediately across from Squibb HQ). Cocktails at 6 P.M.; dinner at 7. To make reservations, call Fritz Cammerzell 609-683-0066.

PRE-P-RADE PICNIC: Then on Sat., June 8, beginning at 11:30 A.M., the Class will have its annual pre-P-Grade Picnic. It is in a new location this year—the garden of Joseph Henry House, in front of Nassau Hall, opposite Maclean House. As in the past, the picnic is free. Given the new P-Grade route, our picnic will at the center of Reunions activity.

Preston Farr has been promoted to managing director of the affiliate relations division at CBS, which oversees CBS's relationship with 210 affiliated stations nationwide. Friends recall that Preston started in television at Princeton, studying with his TV perpetually on and going to class during commercial breaks. After graduation, he became a page at NBC in N.Y. and then entered sales. He learned the intricacies of advertising scheduling and placement at Tele-Rep and Blair Advertising, then joined CBS nine years ago as district manager for the Northeast. He now has a much bigger office, but some things haven't changed; he still works at a desk with a TV that's always turned on.

News has been received of major changes underway for Vera Marcus. She has passed the Calif. bar and is in her first year at Crosby, Heafey, Roach & May, and is about to have a baby. Harold Bursztajn and Patricia Illingworth have had their first child, Zoe Miriam Bursztajn-illingworth, born Feb. 19, 1991. And Rich Sun is making changes too. He has joined Union Bank of Switzerland as first V.P. in N.Y., where he will be establishing a project finance advisory and equity investment group.

Julie Kemper Foyer invites classmates to stop by if they visit Normandy, where she and family reside in a newly purchased 1700s home (14340 Saint Loup de Fribois, 14270 Mezon). She writes, "We continue farming despite GATT talks and the drought of the past two years."

Paul Laud and family—wife, Katherine, and son Matthew—have moved from Chicago to 36 Springbrook Rd., Morristown, NJ 07960. The move was precipitated by an opportunity for Paul to start up a venture capital company for the CIT Group.

Doug McCloskey has established his own law firm, specializing in commercial litigation. Located at 418 South Clay, St. Louis, MO 63122. Doug can be reached at 314-965-3684. This follows many years for Doug as an associate working for others. He credits the support of his family—wife Julie, sons Ben (7) and Sam (4)—in making the change. Doug and Julie recently celebrated their tenth wedding anniversary.

According to Clayton Platt (17 Birchwood Rd., Stamford, CT, 06907), "The demise of the Bank of New England provided my long-overdue liberation from banking. Don't forget to register for Reunions, June 7-9. As we celebrate our lucky 13th, we'll enjoy the company of our friends in the classes of 1973-79 at Little-Edwards courtyard. For more information about Reunions, please call Class President Robb Maass at 407-659-1770 (w) or 881-5705 (h).

80 UP AT BAT: See you there June 6-9 for our 11th. The Class will hold its own reception beginning at noon Saturday prior to the P-rade (which this year has a whole new route). In case you never got one or need another, Class costumes, children's t-shirts, and Class directories from our tenth are still available. For more information, call Arlene Pedovitch or Andy Kaufmann at 609-799-5982.

KUDOS: Donna-Lee Weng's talents as a pianist have won her numerous competitions and she has performed as a concert pianist, both with orchestra and alone, all over the world, including Atlanta, Shanghai, Honolulu and elsewhere. Last month, Donna, who is currently on the faculty of the Mannes College of Music, performed in the Palm Beach Invitational Intl. Piano Competition, was heard on WQXR's Artists' Showcase, and had her N.Y. debut at the 92nd Street Y. Also in the vein of musical kudos, Jason Meyer was recently elected to a six-year term as a charter trustee of WPRB. Jason and wife, Tracy, live in Pennington and he works for the law firm of Dechert, Price & Rhoads.

Alan and Beth Van Cleave Weldon welcomed their first child, Sarah, on Feb. 8. The pair having a good time at left, however, are the sons of Harry and Nora Joffe Elsb. That's Jamie in the lap of older brother Andy. Nora is just completing her master's in elementary education while Harry continues to toil for Shearson Lehman Brothers and moonlights as a daddy.

Jamie Streater and his wife, Kathryn, have relocated from N.Y.C. to San Francisco, where Jamie is a principal in investment banking for Hambrecht & Quist. Jamie reports loving the "city by the bay."

Our ninth reunion is just around the corner (June 6-9). Have you sent in your reunions check? Looks like its going to be great: '81 Wild for the Tenth in the 1901/Henry Courtyard. Will these little ones be coming to the "best old place of all"? Pictured here is Adam Michael Pelta-Pauls, born July 29, 1990 to Eleanor Pelta and Tom Pauls. Eleanor is still practicing law in Washington.

On Nov. 9, 1990, Benjamin Phillip was born to Shelly and Lawrence Leibowitz. Larry says he's a redhead just like his mother. If not this year, hopefully all will be there for the tenth.

Susy Wenz Prosapio sent us this wedding photo of Maria Sanchez and Jay Gardner. They were married Oct. 27, 1990 in Englewood, N.J.

George Vergis married Janet Braley on Oct. 13, 1990, in the Princeton Chapel. They held their reception in the Nassau Inn, celebrating their nuptials with the following tigers: Rusty and Diana Fiste, Bob and Julie Garbi-watie, Vic Rueterbusch, Nick Corcoran '84, John '85 and Wendy Orr, Pete '85 and Mary Noto, Tim '86 and Audrey Kerman, Dave Crisanti '86, Wendy Otis '86, and Mark Braley '92 (brother of the bride). George and Janet met in graduate school at Penn State where Janet received both her undergraduate and master's degrees. George received his doctorate in 1988. They both work in the pharmaceutical industry, she at Ortho Pharm Co. and he at Parke-Davis, where he is the assistant director of Cardiovascular Medical Research.

Susanne Wamsler Redetzki left N.Y.C. in 1988 to attend business school at INSEAD in Fontainebleau, France. Donat von Muller '84 was also in the intense ten-month program but they didn't know it until they both arrived.

In June 1989 Susanne married Albrecht Redetzki, a German she'd met while working at Deutsche Bank in N.Y.C. Classmates Tia Doggett and Robert Adler traveled to Germany for the wedding. Since then Susanne and Albrecht have been living in Struempfelbach, small town near Stuttgart. Most recently they have been joined by Clara Isabella, (pictured at left) who was born in Sept. 1990.

Craig Hudak married Judy Cutler in the summer of 1990. His roommates through four years at Princeton, Tom Barnett, Mark Barilucci, Seu Onysbheuych, and Warren Vresak, all attended the wedding. Craig is now in Korea playing Hawkeye.

IN CASE YOU WERE WONDERING WHO THAT STRANGE TELEGRAM WAS FROM... Lisa Moy is enjoying her new job as an account supervisor with the advertising firm of Scall, McCabe, Sloves. One of her recent projects involved sending telegrams to 100 friends and acquaintances around the world, as part of a marketing survey. While we wait for the results of the survey to come in, Lisa has this to report about classmates she keeps in touch with: Suk Hyeon Yun is in the midst of her residency in internal medicine at St. Luke's Hospital in N.Y.C., while Arthur Yee is working towards his M.D./Ph.D. at N.Y.U. Hospital. Audrey Tung Sleighton is also in N.Y., working in real estate, and Alan Levin will be moving back to the Big Apple after spending the past few years in Puerto Rico with Pfizer Pharmaceuticals. In N.Y., Alan will be involved with Pfizer's Far Eastern operations. Terri Johnson is up north at Yale, in the Ph.D. program in political science. Also in Connecticut is Alyse Hoyos Evans. Alyse and husband James live in Middletown, where Alyse works with the Travelers Insurance Co. Moving beyond the Northeast corridor, Lisa reports that Jeffy Benrey is an engineer with Apple Computer in Silicon Valley, and that Jim Ayala and his wife, Missy, were wed in Dallas in December.

CLASS NOTES CAREER CATCH-UP: Congratulations to Heidi "Cecil" Hoffman, who was featured in last June's issue's column. For those who haven't been tuning in to L.A. Law recently, Cecil has joined the cast of regulars on NBC's critically acclaimed drama series as the Assistant District Attorney Zoey Clemmons. A recent episode about crowded court dockets and the overworked public legal system centered almost exclusively on Cecil's character.

AND A CLOSING ANNUAL GIVING REMINDER... that the 1991 season is almost over. Please consider a donation if you already haven't done so.

LAND OF CHERRY BLOSSOM MANTRA: Gander upon Tiger Town's next great sports legend. Pictured is Morgan Fleet, daughter of Eliot (Ammidon) and Phil Jacobs '83. Morgan is expected to incorporate all of her parents' renowned athletic abilities and corner the market on U-Store letter sweaters. We think she will also be a candidate for the 21 Club.

Hillary Durgin wrote to tell of her transition to Washington, D.C., "the land of cherry blossom mantra and surreal, orderly subways" (and apparently several other hallucinogens). She is writing for PENSIONS & INVESTMENTS, a Crain Communications business magazine. She is "following the buck, so to speak, though not many of us have contemplated retirement yet in this arcane field. Where there is obscurity, there is muck to be dredged," she adds, and we think William Randolph Hearst would be proud.

From the same town, Luz M. Lopez Driscoll announces that she has finally married her high-school sweetheart, Scott Driscoll. She is currently practicing general dentistry and buying gifts for her godson, Timothy, who is the son of Dr. Peter and Mary Succi White.

Mike Fulenbeck states that he has three daughters and is the controller for the Grand Butte Hotel in Crested Butte, where he invites Mike "Julio" Winter to come groom the mountain.

Mary Margaret Smiters questions secretary Rob, "How do you like the job so far?" Why do I think she asks that like the character who dressed up in Little Red Riding Hood's grandmother's clothes, and will she kindly submit a guest column. In fact, will any of you? We censure nothing.

It's A Boy—Drumroll, please... here is the first photo of a Class baby! Nicholas Ryan Bell was born last August 14 to Dena and Brian Bell. The Bells live in Columbus, Oh., where Brian is working ing as an actuary for Nationwide Insurance.

ENGAGEMENTS—On Apr. 7, the N.Y. TIMES ran two engagement announcements of Class members. Rodolfo Mata and Elizabeth Wechsler '89 will marry this August. Rudy is studying for a law degree at Boston College and a master's degree in city planning at M.I.T. Wendy Dreier will marry Simon Ditcham in July. Wendy is a systems analyst at Morgan Stanley in N.Y.

GRAD SCHOOL—Robin Wagner is in her third year of a Ph.D. program in East Asian languages and civilizations (Chinese history) at Harvard. Maureen Dyokas is a graduate student in Hispanic literature at Univ. of Michigan. Having finished the master's program in behavioral neurobiology at Stanford last year, Charles Virgin is now at Cornell working on a Ph.D. in psychology. Anfani Sbab is studying molecular biology at the graduate division of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine. Molly Markert is at Univ. of Penn., pursuing her master's in city planning. And Robby Gregg is a second-year law student at Univ. of Texas.

LETTER OF THE MONTH—After graduation, Ellen Goldberg spent a whirlwind year in China, first teaching in Beijing and then being evacuated by the State Dept. during the Tiananmen uprising. Ellen remains active in Chinese affairs: "I am working full-time for China America Insurance Co., a Sino-American joint venture in N.Y. I continue to work with Human Rights in China, as a contributing translator and editor of the HUMAN RIGHTS TRIBUNE, and a member of the executive committee. Life is very Chinese these days!"

REUNIONS—Our third reunion is set for June 6-9. If you have not received registration information yet, contact Class President Karen Boudre at 215-293-9284. Karen also has extra P'88 sweatshirts if you'd like to buy one. They make great gifts.

Pictured is the large '89 contingent at the wedding of Jennifer Gillen and Bob Scaccheri. Classmates at the Dec. 22, 1990, wedding included (l-r) Todd Davis and his wife Audrey Venezia-Davis, Michelle Calanzano, Andy Vagelos, Jennifer, Bob, Leo Motter, Mariana Parilla von Buchwald, and Derek Bush. Dan Blander, Jon Sarnoff, and Mark Bremer were also there, somewhere. The newlyweds are second-year med students at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine at Wake Forest Univ. in Winston-Salem, N.C. Audrey and Todd were married last Aug. 5, and Derek and Mariana are to tie the knot in June.

Stephanie Jefferis and Prem Subramanian have announced their engagement. They have planned a church ceremony in Allentown, Penn., to be followed by a Hindu ceremony in India. This intraclass couple lives in Houston, Tex.; Stephanie works in the D.N.A. Diagnostics Lab at Baylor College of Medicine, where Prem is an M.D./Ph.D. student. Quick, what does D.N.A. stand for?

THYRAX BACK: P'89 sweatshirts are available once again in L and XL for $28. You can purchase one at Reunions sign-ins or by calling Nuala O'Connor. There will be a brunch on Reunions Saturday (June 8) to thank all Class officers: regional veeps, asst. treasurers, Class agents, and the like. These folks and anyone else (especially those interested in becoming more involved in Class activities) are welcome: 11 A.M.-noon, 111 1938 Hall. R.S.V.P. to Nuala, (h) 609-258-9850, (w) 609-258-4885. Stay tuned for info on mini-reunions in your area. V.P. Norris Boyd is planning one in San Francisco on June 1—call him at 415-960-3383 for details. Answer: deoxyribonucleic acid.

Livingston, NJ 07039

Hmmm, if I were a member of the Class of '90, and it were June 6-9, where would I be? Not a tough question, even if you didn't do the reading. Be there!

Congratulations to Doctor Grants, who married Shannon Michelle Simpson of Nashville last July. After a honeymoon in the Bahamas, the couple lives in N.Y.C., where Doctor works for Goldman, Sachs & Co.

Here's to our honorary classmate, the one and only Pete Carril, who guided his hoopsters to Princeton's best season since the Bradley days. About a million '90ers converged on Jadwin Gym in March to watch the tigers destroy Loyola-Marymount. Mark Herzfeld, our regional V.P. in Houston and the man with the tie in the photo, couldn't get to the game, but he set up shop at a sports bar to watch it on television. Joining him were (l-r) Eric Berlin '87, Larry Stewart, Pete Masloski, Sheila Doppelhammer, and Erik Roberson. Larry was home temporarily from her Peace Corps assignment in Guatemala; Pete works for Dow Chemical and has since been transferred to Minnesota; Sheila is job-hunting in Houston after a trip to Europe; Erik '90 is in the joint M.D./Ph.D. program at Texas Medical Center's Baylor College of Medicine; and Mark works for Exxon.

BACKY JOHNSON
152 Little Hall

Class President Stephan C. Roche writes:

"From the moment we stepped onto campus on Sept. 7, 1987, the notion of 'tradition' has been forever etched onto our collective minds. Whether speaking of the Nude Olympics or Cane Spree or any of the countless other traditions which have become such an integral part of a Princeton education, we seem to thrive on this concept of a common heritage.

"Yet having attended college during years of extreme transformation in the world landscape, perhaps we as a Class should recognize the value of change. Perhaps we need to re-evaluate our impulsive approach to tradition. There are a great many legendary Princeton rituals which have been laid to rest during our own tenure and during the last 250 years. But, more importantly, as a Class we will impart our own, innovative legacies for future Princetonians.

"It is essential to recognize that blindly and rashly continuing Princeton rituals denies the changes that have continually recast this university. Each class has an opportunity to bestow their own identity onto the myth of Princeton. The Class of '91 has done just that during the last four years.

"An opposing side to this argument suggests that blindly and rashly discarding Princeton traditions must also be avoided. Still, traditions must respond to and reflect our generation's experience at Princeton, while acknowledging continuity with the past. No change should ever be mandated unilaterally, but no tradition should exist forever, unaltered simply by virtue of its status as part of Princeton lore.

"Most classmates are aware of several of the changes which will mark the Class of '91's graduation. We hope that an examination of the changes will demonstrate the wisdom of taking a fresh look at what Princeton and its traditions are all about."

The Class of '93 has been dominating Eastern sports recently. In swimming, sophomore Nathalie Winderlich, who holds citizenship in both the U.S. and Switzerland, will swim the 200 backstroke for the Swiss European Championship team, after setting a Swiss record in her event. Nikolai Kremennikov qualified for the NCAA's in the 200-yard individual medley, also winning the 200-yard freestyle and anchoring the winning 400-yard medley relay team at the Eastern Seaboard Swimming and Diving championships. Sophomores Leroy Kim and Mitch "Stead" Derrick also qualified for the NCAA's in the 200-yard medley relay and the 800-yard freestyle relay respectively. In track sophomore Kevin McGuire was a first team All-Ivy selection in the pole vault, and Robin Opie finished 11th at the ICAAs in the shot put. The 1600-meter women's relay team of Dee Binning, Kate Davidson, Lisa Houseman, and Kwanza Jones won first place at the HYP tri-meet, and Melissa Langlots won two of five meets this season in the 55-meter hurdles. In lacrosse John Burstein has been a consistent attacker for the number-two ranked Tigers.

The Class of '93 has been active as well. On May 9-11 the Class will host a "get out in the sun" weekend, featuring a cookout and a band on Thursday, a whitewater rafting trip on Friday, and a carnival on Poe field on Saturday.

BIOCHEMICAL SCIENCES: Paul O. Weislogel '72 is currently V.P. and publishing director for Elsevier Science Publishing in N.Y.

CHEMISTRY: Eric C. Bigham '75 continues as senior research scientist at Burroughs Wellcome. His research has shifted from cancer to cardiovascular pharmacology, and the transition is keeping him quite busy. His daughter Ashley (4) is his main pastime; Eric hopes to bring her to Princeton in the near future.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING: George H. Heilmeyer '62 is currently senior V.P. and chief technical officer of Texas Instruments. He was awarded the 1990 Japan Prize in computers and communications for invention of the liquid crystal display. Edward A. Feustel '67 has completed ten years at Prime Computer and is representing Prime to X/Open Corp.

ENGLISH: Mary FitzGerald '73 is teaching Greek lit. in an honors program and has just received permission from the Yeats estate to edit five manuscripts of the play, THE WORDS UPON THE WINDOW-PANE. Mary has been named associate vice chancellor for academic programs at the Univ. of New Orleans, where she has taught for the last dozen years.

GEOLOGY: Last September, Marvin E. Kauffman '60 joined the firm of R. E. Wright Associates, Middletown, Penn., following a short term as program director at the Natl. Science Foundation. Prior to working for N.S.F., Marvin served as executive director of the American Geological Inst., 1985-90. He taught at Franklin & Marshall College, 1959-84. His current responsibilities are to direct the efforts of Wright Associates in education.

HISTORY: Justus Doernbeche '66 with John Wilz, has co-authored the second edition of FROM ISOLATION TO WAR, 1931-1941 (Harlan Davidson, 1990), a survey of American diplomacy. Last July, Gregg Herken '74 negotiated the exchange of a Soviet SS-20 missile with a U.S. Army Pershing-II for identical displays commemorating the I.N.F. Treaty at the National Air & Space Museum in Washington, D.C., and the Central Armed Forces Museum in Moscow. Gregg, chairman of the space history dept. of the Smithsonian, says, "Come to Washington and see a Soviet nuclear missile." Howard P. Segal '75 published a chapter, "Mumford's Alternatives to the Megamachine," in LEWIS MUMFORD: PUBLIC INTELLECTUAL, eds. T. & A. Hughes (Oxford, 1990).

MATHEMATICS: We have just learned and report with sorrow the death of Alexander Zabrodsky '67 of Hebrew Univ., Jerusalem, in an auto accident three years ago last November.

PHYSICS: The son of Cheuk-Yin Wong '61'66, Albert J. Wong '91, is majoring in physics as his father did 30 years ago. Albert is one of the winners of the 1990 TIME College Achievement awards; he was featured in the May 21, 1990, issue of TIME magazine. Stephen A. Pulling '72 reports the publication of his book, ASPECTS OF QUANTUM FIELD THEORY IN CURVED SPACE-TIME (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1989).

POLITICS: We report with sorrow that Alba M. Gillespie '62 died last October in Eureka, Calif. He had retired in Aug. 1988 as dean of graduate studies and executive assistant to the president at Humboldt State Univ. in Arcata, Calif. The word from Stuart E. Colte '63: "Nichts Neues im Süden. Retired from Central Conn. State U. Pol. Sci. Dept. to try to enjoy softer clime of gulf shore with wife. Still trying to follow political and related ways of world and, if I ever get an inkling of what's going on, to write something about it." (We'll be waiting, Stu!).

RELIGION: Laurence Barmann '66 reports: "To commemorate the centenary of the death of John Henry Newman (1801-1890), two colleagues and I convened at St. Louis Univ. (Nov. 29-Dec. 2, 1990) an international conference to explore Newman's intellectual ethos." Lawrence gave a paper entitled "Was Newman a Modernist?"

ROMANCE LANGUAGES: Nina Daniel '75 writes, "I have moved to Connecticut with my two boys, Danny and James, where I continue to be involved in the public schools, in general, and in teaching English as a second language, in particular."

SLAVIC: Nicholas Rzebusky '72 reports that he has returned to "teaching at S.U.N.Y.—Stony Brook, and some peaceful research, after a year of loud glasnost in Moscow and French rudeness combined with the weak dollar in Paris." He is currently working on and with Russian theater.

WOODROW WILSON SCHOOL: Last Oct., Dominique Lallement '74 became chief of the operations monitoring unit in the central operations dept., office of the V.P. for operations, World Bank. Schintichi Nakayama '75 writes from Japan that he was sorry to miss the alumni reunion, but says he has other chances to see colleagues. Says Shinichi, "I hope that W.W.S. will prosper." Princeton will prosper if we all remember Annual Giving; it pays for excellence AND camaraderie!

John R. Stoltze '17

JACK STOLTZE died at his home in Afton, Minn., Jan. 16, 1991. He was born in St. Paul Nov. 23, 1895, and attended Hill School in Penn. before entering Princeton, where he roomed with "Teak" White and was a member of Tower Club. In WWI he was second lt. of field artillery, with service at the front in the A.E.F. The first eight years after the war he spent with Crystal Oil & Refining Co. in La., then returned to St. Paul to take charge, two years later, of the family business—lumber business in Saskatchewan, mills in Montana, and farm lands in North Dakota. He started a small milk business on a family farm near Stillwater—Maple Island, Inc. During Vietnam it became the Armed Forces' largest supplier of whole-milk powder, beside a country-wide civilian business. Jack remained chairman of Maple Island until his death and was also chairman of Reliance Lumber Co. Ltd. and F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co. He was chairman of Summit School, St. Paul, at various times from 1934 to 1957, a charter member of St. Paul Chamber Orchestra Board, and was active in the Minneapolis Bach Society. He was also on the Board of American Viewpoint, Inc., of N.Y. He is survived by three daughters, a son, ten grandchildren, and 12 great-grandchildren, to all of whom we sent our sincerest sympathy.

Frank Baker '18

IT WAS A HEAVY LOSS for our Class when our splendid Class President Frank Baker '18 died Jan. 11, 1991. Born Aug. 24, 1895, in Atchison, Kansas, where, in recent years he has returned annually to commemorate the early life of a young girl he taught to play basketball—Amelia Earhart, and to raise funds to preserve the Earhart home.

Following his early schooling and skillful tennis performance at the Lawrenceville School, Frank enjoyed being part of R.O.T.C. and the Colonial Club, as well as being a band participant while at Princeton. He served '18 most recently as reunions chair and as Class president. He served as an officer in the Army during WWI, earned a degree in Harvard's graduate business program, and went on to help engineer the price-fixing prosecution against the Borden food company as part of the Roosevelt administration's New Deal Program, only to be hired by Borden later on as a top executive.

Always one who loved to travel, at age 95, Frank, with his son Crowell, left this past Thanksgiving for a two week expedition to Panama City, where, as Crowell relates, "Dad plodded along the muddy trails in the Darien rain forest, traveled the Panama Canal by night and by day, and 'did' some of the waterways of Costa Rica, Honduras, and Belize."

Frank was the widower of Janann Guthrie, who died in 1976. One of his two sons, Guthrie '64, died in 1982. Frank is survived by son Crowell '62 and five grandchildren. Frank had a wonderful capacity to instill energy and new life into our Class as he served as president. We offer tribute to our energetic president!

John Alan Hisey Jr. '23

WE LOST OUR ONE AND ONLY John Hisey when our senior classmate died Oct. 6, 1990. He was born Oct. 31, 1895, and died three weeks before his 95th birthday. He died of having lived his life to the last, a truly great citizen who cherished Princeton University. He wrote "I have traveled far and wide from Maine to Florida and coast to coast and have found, win or lose or draw, that Princeton is the one best place of all." John graduated from Penn Charter School in Philadelphia. He served as a commissioned officer in WWI with the 168th Field Artillery. John's career could equal the Heinz 57 Varieties. He taught and coached baseball and track at Lawrenceville and Country Day School in Kansas City. He was an actor on the N.Y. stage and in 40 films in Hollywood, spent seven years in the advertising trade in N.Y. and Chicago, five years on Long Island in real estate, and his last seven years before retiring on Wall Street. In retirement he became a skillful and successful artist with 150-plus oil paintings including a few of Princeton.

He leaves his widow, the former Frederica Miller, and a daughter, Joan, Mrs. Gustave J. Richter, who both live at Route 3, Box 370, Bedford NY 10506. Three grandchildren also survive.

John Howard Moulton Jr. '23

JOHN, WHO WAS BORN Sept. 13, 1900, departed our troubled world Oct. 31, 1990, at Nokomis, Fla., where he had been spending his winters. Our Class directory lists golf, fishing, and sailing as his special interests.

Our 1923 Ten Year Book listed his connections with a number of business projects, but his prime interest was in travel and adventure. John spent four months on a private schooner sailing on the West Coast of Mexico. He made two trips to China, and spent a half a year hunting and fishing at his summer cottage in Ontario, Canada. His greatest adventure came while on board the last American square rigger, TISTALA. On a trip from Honolulu to N.Y. the ship became becalmed in the doldrums for 30 days. From N.Y. John went to Paris. In France he secured a motorcycle for a jaunt through Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and Spain. He returned to Honolulu via the Dutch East Indies and the Orient on a Japanese freighter. He worked with Union Oil Co. in both Honolulu and Japan for several years. He was not well the last years of his life. He is survived by his widow, Marguerite. His late brother Everts was a member of the Class of 1921.

Franklin F. Trunkey '26

FRANK TRUNKY, former business and civic leader of Spokane, Wash., died Nov. 5, 1990, in Alhambra, Calif., where he had lived the last two years, an Alzheimer victim. Frank will be remembered from undergraduate days as a close friend of Ralph Martin and Lee Eastman, his roommates. After graduation, Frank began his business career in Spokane in the wholesale grocery firm founded by his father and was president of McClintock-Trunkey Co., when it was sold in 1953.

Frank was active in business and civic groups. He gave time and energy to the United Crusade, of which he was chairman in 1957, and as a member of the boards of public bodies including the Spokane Red Cross, the Chamber of Commerce, St. Lukes Hospital, and Fort Wright College.

In 1933 Frank married Dorothy McAtee, who died in 1972. He later married Rose B. O'Leary, who predeceased him in 1987. Our sympathy is extended to Frank's sons, Dr. F.M. Trunkey and David Trunkey; daughter Gloria (Mrs. Lyman W. Newton); adopted daughter Janet (Mrs. Philip W. Leigh); sister Elizabeth Kucher; and several grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Emilio L. Roma Jr. '27

TED BACHMAN reports that Emilio L. Roma Jr., of Chestnut Hill, Penn., died Feb. 3, 1991. He was one of the '27ers who had forsaken a family business (Roma Brothers Bank, Phila.) and tackled a different career—the law. Years of study, at Penn and Temple, earned him an LL.B. degree in 1933 and a long and thriving career in the Quaker City's legal offices and courts.

He was a most loyal alumnus, enjoying many meetings and dinners, and the growing association of his family with the University. His brother, Victor F. Roma, graduated in 1937.

The careers of his daughters brightened his life, consoling him after the death of his son, Emilio III, a professor of philosophy at S.U.N.Y.—Binghamton. Patricia is an attorney, and Catherine, a doctor of musical arts at Binghamton, conducts choral groups.

The Class offers its sympathy to Emilio's widow (nee Elisa Felici), 8000 Anderson St., Chestnut Hill, Penn. Also to his sisters (Mrs. Robert Stewart, Mrs. Albert Peretti, and Mrs. Frank Valgenti), his daughters, his brother Victor, and the children in the family.

Walter William Konvalinka Bennett '38

WALT BENNETT died suddenly Nov. 13, 1990, at his home in Pinehurst, N.C. He prepared for college at Poly Prep in Brooklyn. At Princeton he majored in politics, was captain of the rifle team, and was a member of Key and Seal Club. He went on to Harvard Law School, from which he graduated in 1931.

Walt practiced law with two different firms in N.Y. until 1941, when he became a special assistant to the attorney general—antitrust division of the Dept. of Justice in N.Y. This service was interrupted during the war, 1942-46, by a position as director of military intelligence for the III Service Command in Baltimore. He received the Commendation Ribbon, and attained the rank of colonel.

From 1960 to 1970 he served as administrative judge for the Federal Trade Commission. He was a member of local, state, and national bar assns.

Walt was married to Alice Marsh Waterman May 11, 1935. She survives him, as do four children, Charles, Walter H. II, Elizabeth Ann Steinacker, and Patricia McCarthy, and eight grandchildren. Walt's brother is John K. Bennett '35. The Bennetts moved to Pinehurst, N.C., in 1968. Golf, bird-hunting, sailing, skiing, and wood-working were favorite hobbies.

Walt was an enthusiastic Princetonian and a popular member of our Class. He will be remembered with gratitude and admiration. The sympathy of the Class is with Alice and the family.

Ralph Edward Blank '28

RALPH BLANK died Oct. 18, 1990, at his home in Summit, N.J. He prepared for Princeton at Andover. At Princeton he majored in modern languages, and was a member of Court Club. He earned an M.B.A. degree from Harvard Business School in 1930.

His business career from 1930 to 1979 was entirely with a family firm, Henry Blank & Co., located in Newark, N.J. He was president of the company for many years. He was active in civic affairs, a trustee of the Summit Library and the Summit Art Assn., and was president of the Summit Playhouse Assn.

One of Ralph's hobbies, involving frequent trips to England, was English architecture, especially that of private homes and of pubs and tearooms. He was a member of Central Presbyterian Church of Summit.

Ralph was married Mar. 3, 1934, to Grace Margaret Lane. They had been married for 51 years when she died Mar. 3, 1985. There are two daughters, Elizabeth (Mrs. Brian R.) Hartley and Barbara (Mrs. Harold W.) Danser, and two grandsons. A nephew is Philip E. Blank Jr. '50.

Ralph kept in touch with Princeton and Class affairs by frequent attendance at reunions. He was a cultured gentleman and a relaxed, personable friend for whom his classmates are grateful. Our sympathy is with his daughters and their families.

Richard Springer Huckin '28

DICK HUCKIN died Nov. 9, 1990, at Concord, Mass., after a long illness with both Parkinson's and Alzheimer's diseases. He graduated from Englewood, N.J., H.S. At Princeton he was on the track squad, majored in politics, was in the R.O.T.C., and was a member of Elm Club. He studied for a year at Columbia Law School, and received his law degree from N.Y.U.

Dick served his entire career as a lawyer in Ridgewood, N.J. He served as the recorder for the village of Ridgewood, was president of the Paterson, Passaic, Ridgewood P.A.A., and was also on the schools committee. He was a deacon in the West Side Presbyterian Church of Ridgewood.

Dick married Louise Macalester Sept. 19, 1935. They had one daughter, Virginia (Mrs. George Dixon). He is survived by Louise, Virginia, and a grandson Gregory. Dick's brother, Paul, T. '31 is deceased.

Dick and Louise went to Brevard, N.C., for retirement and lived there for more than ten years. In order to be near their daughter, they later moved to the New England Deaconess Assn. Retirement Home in Concord, Mass.

Dick was always an enthusiastic supporter of Princeton, and attended numerous reunions. His classmates remember and admire him as a courageous gentleman and a warm friend, and their sympathy is with Louise and his family.

John Bradford Milliken '28

JACK MILLIKEN died in N.Y. Hospital Nov. 15, 1990. His preparatory education was at Collegiate School in N.Y. He studied classics and economics at Princeton, and was a member of Cannon Club. He continued his study of economics at Ecole Libre de Science Politique in Paris. He was active in the formation of and was V.P. of Wood Preservation, Inc. in Bridgeport, Conn., and then was with Television Equipment Corp.

Jack was in the Navy for four years during WWII. He was for some time at the U.S.N.R. Bureau of Aeronautics in Washington, and served on the aircraft carrier Norman. He attained the rank of commander.

Swimming was his favorite exercise. He was a member of the Reformed Church of America.

Jack was married in Sept. 1942, to Eleanor Alsop, a marriage terminated by divorce. He married Betty Kirby Stewart Nov. 21, 1947. A daughter Amorette was born in 1949, and died in 1955. After the death of Betty, Jack married Natalia Borisova, who survives him.

Jack maintained his interest in Princeton, regularly attended Class dinners, and was at the 50th reunion. He will be missed by his classmates and friends. The deep sympathy of the Class goes to his widow Natalia.

Edward Barron Rockwell '28

BARON ROCKWELL died of pneumonia at the Rochester (Minn.) Methodist Hospital Nov. 23, 1990. A native of Chicago, he attended Deerfield-Shields H.S. At Princeton he majored in English, was a member of Charter Club, and was a prominent sprinter on the track team, holding the Princeton track record for the 220-yard dash.

Barron joined Halsey, Stuart & Co. immediately after graduation, and spent his entire career with this firm. He rose from V.P. to senior V.P. to executive V.P., and, in 1969, became chairman of the Executive Committee. He retired in 1971. He was president of the Municipal Bond Club of N.Y. in 1959. He traveled widely over the years, especially in the Caribbean.

During WWII Barron served for four years in the U.S. Navy. He served on the Yorcktown, which was sunk in the battle of Midway, and on the Enterprise and Saratoga. He was then deputy chief of naval operations in Washington. He received the Presidential Citation, and was discharged in 1946 with the rank of commander.

Barron, who had been a bachelor until then, on Sept. 27, 1975, married Georgina Rendle Sweet, widow of classmate Bill Sweet, who had died in 1971. She survives him, as do her two children, William E. Sweet III and Diana Sweet Runsey, and four step-grandchildren.

Barron and Georgina divided their time between Tucson, Denver, and Estes Park. Barron kept in touch with Princeton and the Class of 1928. Our sympathy is with Georgina and the family.

Maurice B. Cramer '31 *37

ENGLISH LITERATURE MAJOR AND PROFESSOR, OUR classmate Maurice Cramer died Feb. 26, 1990, at N.C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill. At Princeton he majored in classics, graduated magna cum laude, and received a Ph.D. in English in 1937. He was a professor of English and the humanities at Princeton, Mount Holyoke, Univ. of Tampa, Univ. of Chicago, and Penn State. At the Univ. of Chicago he won the Quantrell Prize for excellence in undergraduate teaching. He was a Fulbright Professor of American Studies at the University of Athens, Greece, 1957-58. The author of numerous articles and poems, Maurice was a member of the Modern Language Assn., the Philological Society, and the governing board of the Assn. of Princeton Graduate Alumni. To his widow, Alice, and their family, the Class extends its sympathy.

Ludlow Elliman '31

GENEALOGIST LUD ELLIMAN died Aug. 31, 1990, at his home in Damariscotta, Me. He came from St. Paul's School and at college was on the crew, hockey team, and the Daily Princetonian. He served as a U.S. Navy air combat intelligence officer in WWII, and later became an insurance broker, receiving a quality award on two occasions. Lud's consuming interest in recent years was genealogy, and he was an active member of the Society of Cincinnati, the Huguenot Society, Sons of the American Revolution, and the Order of the Crown of Charlemagne. To his widow, Jane, sister of our late Len Yerkes, and to the family, the Class extends its sympathy.

Harold Raymond Medina Jr. '34

HAL MEDINA, a leading N.Y. libel law expert, died Feb. 17, 1991, at his home in Village of Golf, Fla., of cancer of the lung. His father, Judge Medina '09, died last March. A lifelong resident of N.Y.C. until his retirement in 1974, Hal had a long and illustrious career as a litigation partner at Cravath, Swaine & Moore, with cases throughout the world. In the Sullivan case, his best known, in defending Time Inc., he changed the law of libel in N.Y. to require malice. In another case he reversed Richard M. Nixon in the U.S. Supreme Court. He served on several bar association committees, including the executive committee of the N.Y. State Bar.

Hal was prominent as well in the affairs of Westhampton, N.Y., where he had been a summer resident since 1916 and where he served as rear-commander of the yacht club and, in 1953-55, as president of the country club. He enjoyed sailing, tennis, and golf.

Surviving are Hal's wife of 55 years, Janet Brevoort Williams; two sons, Harold R. III '60 and Robert B. '62; a daughter, Ann; three grandchildren, and a brother, Standish F. Medina '37. To them we offer our sincere sympathy.

Edward Crane Kirkpatrick '35

ED KIRKPATRICK died Dec. 29, 1990, after a courageous battle against circulatory problems over nine years. He prepared at Tower Hill School in Wilmington, Del. At Princeton he majored in chemistry and continued in that discipline for a year at the Graduate College. He then transferred to the Univ. of Ill., from which he received his doctorate in organic chemistry in 1938.

He joined the Du Pont Co. as a research chemist in 1937 and remained with Du Pont until his retirement in 1975. In 1959, he was assigned to Du Pont's international dept. as director of development, followed three years later by his transfer to Geneva, Switzerland, as assistant director of the European division. There he became vice chairman of Du Pont's European division, and, in 1965, he returned to Wilmington as assistant to the chairman, a position he held until retirement in 1975.

Ed was a former president of the P.A.A. of Delaware and a regional chairman for A.G. Princetonians in his family included his father, Littleton Kirkpatrick '06; uncles Edward M. Crane '18 and Jasper E. Crane '01; and his cousin, John H. Miller II '39. He is survived by his widow, Mary Scott, to whom he had been married just three weeks short of 50 years, and by three sons, E. Scott '63, David T., and John T. '71, and a daughter, Polly; his twin brother Littleton Jr., one grandson, and a cousin, Edward M. Crane Jr. '45, to all of whom the Class extends its sincere sympathy.

Ed will be remembered as a classmate with a supremely active mind, encompassing many fields of interest, and for his warmth and abiding friendship.

Duncan Van Norden '35

DUNCAN VAN NORDEN died Dec. 15, 1990, in Palm Beach, Fla. During recent years in Palm Beach, he was a director of the Society of The Four Arts and of the Palm Beach Civic Assn. He was also president of the Palm Beach Chapter of the English Speaking Union.

Prior to his Florida residence, the N.Y.C. area benefited from his skillful direction of the N.Y.C. Mission Society and as a long-time treasurer of the Central Presbyterian Church, a member of the Princeton Club of N.Y. (of course!) and of an impressive array of other clubs and societies.

Princeton University benefited from his leadership in many areas, notably as national chairman of the Annual Giving Program in 1962-63. A handsome picture of Duncan appears opposite page 49 in the latest volume of the "Gifts to Princeton" annual publication.

Duncan also had a distinguished military career in the Navy, starting out as a lieutenant (j.g.) and retiring after the Korean conflict as a full commander.

He is survived by his widow, Betsy, two daughters, two step-daughters, one brother (Langdon Van Norden '37), one sister, three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

Francis Herrington Bell II '36

HANK DIED July 10, 1990, of congestive heart failure at the Princeton Med. Center. He was the son of George H. Bell '04. Hank prepared at Gilman and Hun Schools. He entered as a freshman with our Class after transferring from Wesleyan. He majored in politics, was an undergraduate governor of Charter Club, and a member of Triangle. He roomed with Ralph Herendeen and Harry Deaklyne who died in 1981.

Hank was born in Trenton and was a resident there and in Wrightstown, Penn., before moving to Rossmore, N.J. During WWII he served four years in the U.S. Navy, retiring in 1946 as a lt. commander. After the war he became associated with Morrison Steel Co. of New Brunswick.

He is survived by his widow, Doris Bebbington Bell, whom he married in 1939; son Taylor B. Bell, daughter Joan B. Rogers, four grandchildren and one great-grandson. Hank will be remembered by his many friends in the Class.

Theodore Borstel Keer '36

TED DIED July 6, 1990, in Newark, N.J., where he lived all of his life. For a good part of his adult life he suffered from an advance diabetes, which imposed severe restrictions on his activities.

He graduated from Lawrenceville, and at Princeton majored in philosophy and was a member of Colonial Club. He left Princeton in his senior year. In WWII he served three years in the Western Pacific theater as an armorer for an aircraft in the U.S. Air Force.

Ted worked several years as a freelance photographer specializing in action albums of the then (1930s) fast-disappearing steam locomotives, until forced by his illness to retire from this activity.

In 1969 Ted married Nancy Goertz of South Orange, N.J. She predeceased him June 10, 1990. He is survived by brothers Alexander W. Keer '34 and Frederick Keer.

The Class of 1936

Roger Edmund Kellogg '36

ROGER DIED July 12, 1990, of cancer. After graduating from the Pingry School, at Princeton he majored in politics and was a member of Cloister Inn.

He spent 19 years in the marine and fire insurance business in N.Y. and Chicago with Atlantic Centennial Insurance cos. Roger then made an important decision to go into the ministry. After graduating from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1958, at age 44, he was ordained by the Presbyterian Church. He served parishes in Pennsylvania and Illinois until his retirement in 1977. At our 50th reunion he conducted our Class memorial service at the University Chapel.

His hobbies were playing piano, singing in choral groups, photography, and golf. Besides leaving Princeton life savings gifts, he was proud to have Princeton accept a fine gift now displayed in the Jadwin Gym lobby: a beautiful painted sculpture of a Kashmir tiger, which Roger purchased while in India. It is displayed in front of a 1936 Class banner and the record of '36's 1935 undefeated football team, against which only 32 points were scored.

Survivors include his widow, Margaret Mauger Kellogg, whom he married in 1938; sons Lawrence T. and Michael A.; daughter Mrs. Leslie Lyman; and grandson Jeffrey D. Lyman '94 and four other grandchildren.

We will miss Roger. He was an ardent Princetonian and a man of good will.

The Class of 1936

John Cornell Murray Jr. '36

JACK DIED Jan. 26, 1991, at Baptist Hospital, Miami, Fla. He was born Oct. 19, 1914, in Trenton, N.J. His father was John Cornell Murray '13.

After graduating from Mercersburg Academy, at Princeton he majored in electrical engineering and was a member of Court Club.

During his career, he served as a V.P. of the former Crescent Insulated Wire and Cable Co., president of the Trenton Chamber of Commerce, and president of both the Trenton Country Club and the Engineers Club of Trenton. He was also a member of the Board of the N.J. Natl. Bank, and member of the Trenton Club, the Ocean Reef Club, and the Anglers Club of Key Largo, Fla.

Jack is survived by his widow, Helen Barrett Murray, whom he married in 1943, son Michael J., daughters Barbara M. Vaughn, Jane M. McCoy, brother Holt A. Murray, and eight grandchildren.

Jack lived a full life and indeed was a credit to his University and Class.

The Class of 1936

William Georgi Rodgers '36

RATHER RECENTLY we received word that Bill died May 14, 1987. His father was Earle V. Rodgers '10, and his late brother was John G. Rodgers '35.

Bill graduated from the Princeton Preparatory School. At the University he was a member of Triangle Club. He left Princeton at the end of his sophomore year, but throughout his life he maintained great interest in the University.

In 1943 he joined the U.S. Marine Corps as a private. He was discharged three years later as a captain with the First Marine Air Wing based in Tientsin, China. His widow received a posthumous Certificate of Commendation signed by President Reagan in recognition of Bill's service over and above the call of duty.

Bill spent his business career as an officer in the family-controlled Papyrus Co. of Kenilworth, N.J., a manufacturer of special paper products. In 1974 his company was acquired by Cincinnati Industries, from which he retired as a consultant in 1984.

He was a trustee of the Brielle, N.J., Public Library and helped establish the Reformed Church of America in Brielle. Bill and his wife lived in Eatontown, N.J., and for the last 25 years enjoyed a second home in S.C.

Bill is survived by his widow, Hilary Stanyer Rodgers, whom he married in 1938. He will be remembered as one with a warm and sincere personality.

Lefferts Strebeigh '36

LEFF DIED Oct. 10, 1990 in San Antonio, Tex., after a brief illness. He prepared at Kent School. At Princeton he was a member of Colonial Club. He left Princeton at the end of his sophomore year but maintained a lifelong devotion to the University and Class.

When the draft was initiated in 1940, he was among the first group to be inducted in the army for WWII service. Rising through the ranks in the infantry, he early on volunteered for paratroop duty and served overseas with the famous 82nd Airborne Division. He served in the Aleutians and European theaters. He was discharged in 1946 with the rank of captain.

After the war he was associated for a time with Hawley-Lord, producer of 16-m.m. films, but for most of the years prior to his retirement in the mid-1970s, he was associated with the Allen Travel Service. In 1979 he moved from his native N.Y.C. to San Antonio, spending most of the year there and wintering in Acapulco, Mexico.

Whenever possible, he maintained close contact with Princeton, his Class, the 82nd Airborne and friends of Kent School. He indeed will be missed. Leff is survived by his twin brothers Robert M. '45 and Woodruff F.

Benjamin Holliday Taplin '36

BEN DIED of cancer July 10, 1990 in Cleveland, Oh. He attended the Hawken School of Cleveland and graduated from Choate School. At Princeton he majored in politics and he was a member of Tiger Inn.

He spent some 36 years with Pickands Mather and Co., retiring in 1972 after which he and his wife, Betsy, moved to Dublin, N.H. In 1989 they returned to Cleveland.

Ben entered military service as a private in late 1940 and was separated as a captain early in 1946. He served with the mechanized cavalry in the European theater and was wounded in 1944. He received three battle stars.

He was a deacon of Fairmont Presbyterian Church, a trustee of the Youth Services Council and was president of the Hawken School Alumni Assn. He was a member of the Tavern Club, Union Club, Kirtland Country Club, Chagrin Valley Hunt Club and the Dublin Lake Club. His hobbies were horseback riding and golf.

In 1944 Ben married Elizabeth Olney, whom he met while both were Army lieutenants at Fort Riley, Kansas. She survives him, as do two sons, Benjamin H. Jr. and Courtenay O., and two grandchildren. His brother, C. Farrand Taplin Jr. '31 predeceased him.

Ben was a very loyal Princetonian and classmate. We of the Class will always remember his outgoing personality, his warm sense of humor and his devotion to his family and friends.

Herbert W. Backes Jr. '37

ENTHUSIASTIC PRINCETONIAN, much-decorated Lt. Col. Herb Backes died Feb. 13, 1991, of lung cancer in Lambertville, N.J. At Andover Herb was on the wrestling and track teams and majored in economics at Princeton. He was a member of Key and Seal.

After four years as sales manager of the Delaware Floor Products in Wilmington, Herb embarked on an army career 1941-1946, with 18 months overseas and one year in combat as assistant operations officer with the eighth Infantry Division in Europe in the E.T.O. and then field artillery, earning five battle stars and a Bronze Star. In 1950 he was recalled for service in Korea (accompanied by brother Bob '39 "for winter sports"), and after a year's combat duty, was discharged, with three more battle stars and the Legion of Merit and the Army Commendation Ribbon in Korea.

Next came activity as a poultry wholesaler, including selling to several clubs on Prospect, and as salesman of the Tattersall Co. of Johns-Manville home insulation. He then bought a farm in East Aurora and became a purchasing agent for Delevan Electronics, coil manufacturers. He was forced into semi-retirement in 1956 due to ill health, but continued working as treasurer for Willink Real Estate, until final retirement in 1980.

Herb married Mary MacDonald in 1938 and produced Bonnie and Herb III (now deceased). He married the late Kitty Tindall in 1951, with stepson Jud '67.

Theodore H. Conderman '37

JOVIAL, ACTIVE Princetonian and reuner, insurance man Ted Conderman died Jan. 14, 1991, of a stroke.

Ted came to us from St. George's, where he was on the soccer and wrestling teams. At Princeton he majored in psychology, was on the freshman and then varsity lightweight crew squads and the undefeated freshman soccer team, and was a member of Charter.

After three months hunting and fishing (dry-fly fishing remained a hobby) in the Yukon after graduation, he went into insurance with Marsh & McLennan, first in N.Y. and then in Pittsburgh, before enlisting in the Marines in 1942, only to be discharged for medical reasons. So it was back to Marsh & McLennan until Jan. 1950, when he joined Fred S. James & Co. for ten years before moving to Johnson & Higgins as senior V.P., marine insurance specialist (one of four classmates with the firm), all in Pittsburgh. He retired in June 1976 and moved to Ranch Santa Fe, Calif.

Our sympathies go out to his widow Penelope Bridge, his four children by a previous marriage to Margaretta Frew, and his eight grandchildren.

"I would like to say what a great bunch of classmates we had and how much they did to make life after graduation so really pleasant."

A. Hawthorne Davidson '37

TEX DAVIDSON, born in Dallas, theological scholar and ex-Marine, died Nov. 9, 1990, at home in Laurens, S.C., of heart failure. He left his widow, Eleanor, one son, and three daughters, and just missed the advent of his first grandchild, Joseph Thompson Davidson.

Tex came to Princeton from Boys' Latin in Dallas, where he featured football, fencing, and lacrosse and graduated magna cum laude. At Princeton he majored in history, won the George Potts Bible Prize, and was on the freshman fencing and lacrosse teams, and was president of the League of Evangelical Students. Thereafter he studied at the Dallas Theological Seminary and in 1941 graduated from the Columbia Theological Seminary in Decatur, Ga., becoming pastor of the Florida Street Presbyterian Church of Baton Rouge, La. Then came a stint in the Navy as Chaplain, attached to the Marines in the Asiatic Pacific and Okinawa. Separation came in the summer of 1946, as a lieutenant.

Next came graduate work in biblical theology and theology at Edinburgh, Scotland; Vanderbilt University; and Union Theological Seminary in Virginia. Meanwhile, in 1949-51, he served as pastor of two Presbyterian churches in Hart County, Ga. Theological study and writing continued and part-time farming, and, later, teaching English and history at Baltimore Polytechnic Inst., before retiring in 1979 to plantation country in Georgetown, S.C.

He married Eleanor in 1950, producing a son, three daughters, and one grandson. Our deepest sympathies go to Eleanor and the children.

BEN MOUNT, retired manager of the mathematics section at the Betts Atomic Power Laboratory of Westinghouse Electric Corp., died Feb. 9, 1991, of congestive heart failure, leaving his widow, Pauline; daughter Patricia M. Reymann of St. Paul, Minn.; a son Ben III of Vineland, N.J.; four grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren.

Ben was track manager, stage electrician, and a member of the French Club at Princeton High. He majored in electrical engineering at Princeton, where he was awarded the Samuel Harrison Smith Scholarship sophomore year, the S.H. Smith and Jeannette McParlane Galt Scholarships junior year, and then the Orson Desaix Munn Fellowship in electrical engineering, and graduated with honors. After nine years with Westinghouse as design engineer in the motor engineering dept. in East Pittsburgh, he shifted into teaching at the Univ. of Pittsburgh, where he had received his doctorate, as an assistant professor of mathematics, 1946-1953, before returning in 1954 to Westinghouse in nuclear reactor manufacture, as manager of the mathematics section at its Betts Atomic Power Laboratory. His first wife, Marie, died in 1950. He retired in 1976.

All our condolences go to this many-tiered family.

Samuel Clay Jr. '39

AFTER A LONG ILLNESS Sam died Sept. 24, 1990, at his home in Paris, Ky., where he lived all his life. Upon graduation, he returned to Paris to take up farming, affiliated with his father. In 1965 he also began an association with the Bourbon Agricultural Deposit Bank and Trust Co., eventually becoming board chairman, a position he held to the end of his life. He also continued to farm until the day his son Sam III could take over, continuing a family pattern of several generations.

Sam and Dorothy Lair were married in 1943. Living in the house where he was born, they were surrounded by family and friends of long standing, a style of life Sam loved. He also enjoyed serving on local boards involving community welfare and was deacon at North Middletown Christian Church. One friend said of him, "He was never looking for the limelight. He went about doing good and he went about doing it quietly." Said another, "He was an intellect and he was compassionate. He was just a fine man."

To lose him is hard for all who knew him. We share that loss and offer our sincere sympathy to Dorothy; their two daughters, Kate Barret and Martha; their sons, Sam Clay III and Charlton; and all his extended family.

JOE DIED Oct. 8, 1990, in Venice, Fla., where he had been living in retirement for the past eight years. His home had been in Windsor, Conn., where he was engaged in sales throughout his career. Joe did not graduate with our Class, but always remained affiliated with us anyway. We remember he played freshman football with us and was described by Fritz Crisler as the best potential center he'd ever seen. Joe counted his 27 years as lay-reader at his Episcopal church in Windsor a most important and rewarding part of his life. His sports activities were tennis and golf, but in the past few years, he told us in our 50th yearbook, he had severe emphysema, which had forced him to become a "couch potato" sports enthusiast.

To his widow, Catherine, their daughter, Cathy Langrehr, their three sons, Joseph B. III, Thomas, and Peter; and Joe's sister, Elizabeth Havens; we offer our sincere sympathy.

A RETIRED LIEUTENANT GENERAL and decorated veteran of three wars, Joe died Jan. 2, 1991, in the Naval Hospital at Balboa Park, San Diego. He was 70.

Joe enlisted in the Marine Corps Reserve while on campus. He was a P.F.C. at graduation in Nov. 1942, with a B.A. in political science. Commissioned a second lieutenant, he went to the Pacific Theatre with the Fourth Marine Division. In the immediate post-war era, Joe completed training courses in Washington, D.C.

and Quantico, Va.; later, he was assigned as an instructor in amphibious techniques at Coronado, Calif.

As a company commander in the Korean War, Joe was wounded and received his second silver star. He then went to Japan, and served for two years as assistant naval attaché to the U.S. Embassy in Madrid, Spain. In Vietnam, Joe acted as deputy commander, receiving the Legion of Merit for his service in that country. Joe held the post of commanding general, San Diego M.C.R.D. in Feb. 1973. He retired in 1978, and made his home in Point Loma, Calif.

He is survived by his widow, the former Maxine Ann Scholder; two children, Ann Fegan Waldruff and Joseph C. Fegan III, a Marine Corps officer, and three grandchildren. To the entire family, we offer our deepest and most heart-felt condolences.

A LONG-TIME RESIDENT of Darien, Conn., Marty died suddenly and unexpectedly Feb. 2, 1991, at the age of 70. Death occurred at his East Dorset, Vt. home, where he had lived for the past 19 years.

Marty was born in Flushing, N.Y., and prepped for Princeton at St. Mark's School in Southborough, Mass. During WWII, he served in the Merchant Marine.

In 1950, he married Barbara Ballantine. They made their home in Darien. While there, Marty worked as a quality control engineer for Machlett Laboratories. He was also a member of the Noroton Fire Dept. and the Noroton Yacht Club. After his move to Vermont, Marty became a real estate agent; at the time of this death he was zoning administrator for the town of East Dorset.

In addition to his widow, Marty is survived by three sons: Philip Garver Franklin of Longwood, Fla.; Lindley Maartin Franklin of Darien; and Steven N. Franklin of Boston. Also a brother, Edward Vernon Franklin of Martha's Vineyard, Mass., and five grandchildren. To the survivors, we extend our deepest sympathies.

Francis Hamilton Dyckman Jr. '48

FRANK DYCKMAN DIED Feb. 24, 1991. Born in London and always an anglophile, Frank came to us by way of Buckley School and Lawrenceville. At Princeton he was captain of varsity soccer for three years, roomed with Bill Blair, and graduated cum laude.

After army service and a stint at the Univ. of Paris, Frank's love of books and learning took him to the distinguished publisher, Houghton Mifflin, where he served from 1952-78, for the most part as manager of the N.Y. office. In 1979 he returned to Lawrenceville to be director of alumni relations and was responsible for all alumni activities. He served until his death.

Frank's firm loyalty and gentle good nature characterized his chairing our 25th reunion and his term as Class president, 1973-78. His avid devotion to Princeton and to Lawrenceville were all a piece.

Frank was the founder and long-time president of the Princeton Soccer Assn., the youth soccer program that now involves some 800 boys and girls. He was for many years treasurer of the Dyckman House Museum Fund, which maintains the Dyckman farm house in N.Y.C., a National Registered Historic Landmark.

To his widow, Sue, daughters Jennifer Aldrich '82 and Catherine, and son Kinsey '85 the Class extends its deepest sympathy and shares in their loss.

William Raymond Hilliard '49

BILL HILLIARD passed away in St. Joseph's Hospital, Lexington, Ky., July 1, 1990, of pancreatic cancer that had been diagnosed only four weeks earlier.

Bill was born Jan. 23, 1928 in Pittsburgh, and prepped for Princeton at St. Paul's. At Princeton he majored in mechanical engineering and was a member of Ivy Club. After graduation in 1951, he enlisted in the U.S. Air Force, and served until Dec. 1953. He married Mary Suydam Edwards in 1951, and they subsequently had three children. In 1954 Bill joined a brokerage firm in Dayton, but left after a year to pursue his real interest, training harness horses, in Orlando.

By 1964 Bill was owner of the Futurity Hill Standard Bred Farm in Lexington, Ky., and in the late 1970s moved to Columbus, Oh., becoming executive V.P. of the U.S. Trotting Assn. His first marriage having ended in divorce, in 1972 Bill married Marion Walstead, who passed away six years later, and he continued to raise her two children.

In 1985 Bill returned to Lexington as director of the U.S. Polo Assn., retiring in 1987. On Aug. 2, 1986, he had married Melinda McEntee, mother of two, and they lived happily until his sudden illness and death. Bill founded Innovative Association Management in 1967.

Bill is survived by his widow, Melinda; sons William Jr. and Ogden; a daughter, Polly Fahs; stepdaughters Jami and Kristen Flora; Melinda's children, Patricia and Kelli Ryan; and his brothers, Thomas J. Hilliard Jr. '43 and Harry T. Hilliard '45. To all Bill's family we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

JOHN SCHULER passed away at his home in Issaquah, Wash., June 23, 1990, a victim of heart disease.

John was born May 5, 1928 in Teheran, Iran, the son of a foreign missionary. He prepared for Princeton at the Hill School. At Princeton he majored in aeronautical engineering, was on the J.V. wrestling team, and worked for the Student Express Agency, and was a member of Key and Seal Club and the Princeton Flying Club.

Graduate work in aeronautical engineering at Princeton earned John his master's in 1952, and he then joined the aerodynamics department of Douglas Aircraft in Los Angeles. He had married the former Imogene Leeds in 1948, and over time they had seven children. John moved on to become head of flight dynamics at Cornell Aeronautical Laboratory in Buffalo, N.Y. His first marriage having ended in divorce, John returned to the West Coast in the mid-1960s and became principal engineer for the Boeing Military Airplane Co.

In Sept. 1988 John married the former Nina Tolin, and they lived happily in Issaquah until his death. He had for years been an avid skier, and while his illness denied him that, he continued to enjoy his hobby of model railroads. Besides his widow, Nina, John is survived by his seven children—daughters Dorothy, Karen, Eleanor, and Meredith Schuler, and Allison Latham; sons Lawrence and John Jr.; and six grandchildren. To all of them we extend our deepest sympathy.

DON HUTTER died Feb. 22, 1990, of cancer after a brief illness. Born in London in 1922, Don came to the U.S. from Vienna in 1938 at the time of the Anschluss. At Princeton he was the chief editor of the 1953 Bric-A-Brac.

Don was an editor at Charles Scribner's Sons from 1957 through 1967, when he joined the Dial Press as a senior editor. He became editor in chief there in 1969 and left in 1972 to become executive editor of the General Books Div. of Holt, Rinehart & Winston, where, in 1981, he became editor in chief. From 1982 to 1985 Don served as V.P. and senior editor for Simon & Schuster. From that time until his death, he was again at Holt, which became Henry Holt & Co., where he had his own imprint, Donald Hutter Books. During his career, he evidenced an elegant-mannered way with words, a deep devotion to the good of the work itself, and abiding loyalty to friends and great patience and generosity.

Don also published his own short stories in Esquire, LADIES HOME JOURNAL and the SATURDAY EVENING POST and was the author of two children's books (the first published when he was 13). Don is remembered as a "gentleman"—in its best meaning—and as nurturing to authors and young editors.

Don is survived by his widow, Martha Corbett Hutter, and three daughters, Anne Victoria, Stephanie Grace, and Sarah Catherine.

CHEST (LIN) died of throat cancer July 21, 1990, at his home in Mill Valley, Calif. Known to many of us as Lin, he was born in New Rochelle, N.Y., and attended the Deerfield Academy prior to entering Princeton. Lin majored in English and was a member of Tower Club. He will always be remembered as a voracious reader. Following graduation Lin served as an officer in the U.S. Coast Guard.

His business career included various management and sales positions with Standard Oil of N.J. in Europe and North Africa; Keydata Corp. in N.Y.; and Xerox Computer Services in N.Y. and Calif. Most recently he was a self-employed business consultant associated with Williams Associates. Lin was writing a book on small business at the time of his death.

He is survived by his daughter Susan, son David, and his fiancée, Susan Fentress. The Class extends its sincere condolences to the family. His wit and enthusiasm for life will be greatly missed.

BRAD ORBESEN DIED of cancer of the esophagus Dec. 5, 1990. Brad graduated from Maumee Valley Country Day School in Toledo, Oh. At Princeton, Brad was a member of Quadrangle Club along with roommates Bob Collier, Key Foster, John Noye, Milk Detch, and Jim Owens. At Princeton, Brad played 150-lb. football and participated in the N.R.O.T.C. Midshipman Program, graduating with a degree in mechanical engineering.

Upon graduation, Brad moved to Bridgeport, N.Y., married his childhood sweetheart, Joyce McClaren, and began a four-year Navy tour in Japan. After his Navy tour, Brad joined Carrier Corp., where he spent 31 years. Brad held two patents for components in air conditioning equipment and especially enjoyed his work in the field of solar energy. An avid golfer and fisherman, Brad also enjoyed woodcarving, square-dancing, and landscaping. He was active in civic affairs, serving on the school board and on the Town of Sullivan parks and recreation board for 12 years.

Surviving are his widow, Joyce; twin sons, Chris and Clay; daughter Sharon Lee Woodall; and six grandchildren. To all of them Class extends its sympathy.

JIM DIED Dec. 16, 1990 after a violent fight against a brain tumor. At the time the illness was diagnosed, Jim was engaged in what would most likely have been a successful campaign for election as a Justice of the Alabama Supreme Court.

Jim was born Oct. 11, 1941, in La Grange, Ga. He lived most of his life in Lanett, Ala., but during a three-year family business stint in N.Y.C., he graduated from the Riverdale Country School before attending Princeton. At Princeton, Jim majored in religion, took his meals at Ivy Club, and generally prepared himself for a life in the practice of law.

In 1967, he graduated from Emory Univ. Law School, where he was executive director of the Law Review. After a brief period with an Atlanta law firm, he returned to Lanett and started his own law firm in 1970. In 1976, he was elected presiding judge of the fifth judicial circuit in Alabama, a position he held at the time of his death.

Jim was a true "southern gentleman." In the words of his good friend, Walter Empson: "his classmates will remember Jim's unhurried and unruffled manner, his willingness to take time for others, his thoughtful, quiet and wise nature . . . qualities which served him well in life."

Many of Jim's classmates also will remember and cherish a delightful, impromptu treatise he authored entitled "Judge Avary's Guide to the Redneck Riviera" which served as the "bible" for a Class mini-reunion in Ft. Clear, Ala., which he hosted just prior to our 25th.

To his widow, Leewood; his daughters, Pye and Scottie; and his brother, T. Scott Avary, Jr. '62; the Class extends its deepest sympathy. We will all miss Jim.

THE CLASS OF 1986 mourns the death of Jason Jones, who passed away of lymphoma Oct. 20, 1990, in N.Y.C.

Jason graduated from Long Branch High School in Long Branch, N.J., where he was an award-winning drummer and champion gymnast. During Jason's first year at Princeton, he discovered his talent and love for dance, which became the focus of the rest of his life. Jason was the president and director of the Expressions Dance Company at Princeton and also danced with the Teamwork Dance Company and the Princeton Ballet.

Jason also participated in theater, performing with the Triangle Club, Theatre Intime, and the McCarter Theater. Jason was a member of the Ivy Club, the Third World Center, and the Society of Black Engineers.

Following graduation, Jason studied at the Alvin Ailey School of Dance and became a member of the Alvin Ailey Dance Ensemble. He also danced with the Muller Works Dance Troupe and the Marita Goshen Earthworks Dance Company.

In Jason's short life, he succeeded in overcoming many obstacles. He brought joy to hundreds of people through his dance and joy to his friends by his graceful spirit and talent for living life to the fullest. He will be sorely missed by his friends and classmates.

Lust and Love at Pre-Coed Princeton

"HAVE YOU EVER touched your girlfriend's bra?" one of my roommates asked, not long after we had met as freshmen at Princeton. He had dispensed with the awkwardness of not knowing me the first eighteen years of my life by plunging straight into the privacy of my innermost being.

Did you? he asked, a grin stretched from ear to ear. The question introduced one of the great themes of my Princeton education, and I experienced my first great anxiety of college trying to answer it. On the one hand, I thought the question degraded my high-school girlfriend and the answer was none of his business; on the other hand, I was embarrassed by the implication that somehow I might be deficient as a man. In the end, I avoided the question and, of course, revealed my naiveté about sex. In fact, not only had I never touched her bra, but it had never occurred to me to do so. With no women on the campus, it was to be a long and complicated four years.

At the end of our first few weeks at Princeton, an event of singular unimportance took place in Dillon Gym: the freshman mixer. It is one of those experiences that remains fixed in my mind as a symbol of life in an all-male society. I remember arriving at the gym to find hundreds of other freshmen milling around in front of locked doors. Suddenly, a bus appeared at the top of the hill. Then came another and another, pouring out of some cornucopia we couldn't see. The buses crept down the road and stopped by the side of the gym, where the ticket office once was. After each bus stopped, some thirty to forty girls disembarked, led by a chaperone. Protected by a double rank of proctors, they walked through the crowd into the gym. The doors remained closed to us.

Having spent two or three weeks on the campus, we had begun to feel the weight of our decision to attend an all-male school, and we had the scent. Our blood was up, and we cheered and yelled and tried to attract the girls' attention. Some of us assigned them grades, as if they were sides of beef and we were meat inspectors. A few of the bolder girls smiled and laughed and waved; others seemed bewildered, some anxious. Most avoided our eyes and looked straight ahead, or at the ground.

One by one, the girls disappeared into the gym, until finally the last bus had emptied. As if responding to some signal, the crowd of men swung back around to the front of the gym and pressed against the doors, chanting for them to open. When they did, we charged through the lobby and bolted up the stairs onto the main floor. There in the middle of the gym, several hundred girls huddled together. They stared at us the way I have seen cattle stare: uncomprehending, blank, ready to stampede and scatter. I was in the vanguard, and as I ran toward the girls, it suddenly occurred to me that I had no idea what to do. Upperclassmen had advised us to concentrate on taking names and addresses for the future. But how did you do that? These thoughts raced through my mind, and as my doubts multiplied, I stopped to gape. By the time I recovered, all the pretty girls had been taken by the same upperclassmen who had advised us.

I went that entire first year at Princeton without a date. I studied every Saturday night until eleven, then allowed myself the luxury of an hour of shooting pool at the Student Center. Throughout that dismal year, I debated with my roommates the merits of being at Princeton, cursed the absence of women, and thought about them all the time. During sophomore year, I discovered that alcohol made the social situation more bearable. Drink a few beers, and the girls who cruised the center of the campus in cars no longer seemed unapproachable. We climbed on the hoods of their cars and laughed as they drove around in a frenzied effort to shake us off. In our incessant search for dates, we called friends of friends, sisters, high-school girls, girls we hadn't seen since ninth grade. If one of us actually succeeded in getting a date for a party weekend, we paid for her meals and lodging and all her entertainment. We took her to Commons for dinner. If she was a knockout, the dateless inmates of Upper Cloister showed their approval by banging their spoons on the tables; some even climbed on the tables and yelled. Any date deemed less than attractive, however, elicited a sound like the lowing of cattle.

The weekends of big parties were aberrations in a social system that was itself bizarre. By mid-Saturday, we usually had run out of things to say to our dates. We danced and drank mindlessly, and awoke Sunday to see how early we could get them on trains out of town. We claimed records for the earliest departures and wrote them on the wall of our living room. One Sunday morning, I went to pick up my date for brunch and discovered that she had taken a taxi to Trenton. It was a record.

In the midst of such prolonged musth, getting mail from a girl was the climax of the week, the month, the semester. We almost never did. No mail, no women—Princeton really sucked. We celebrated this conclusion by giving the university a “360 bird.” This act consisted of sticking out our middle fingers and rotating 360 degrees, so that all directions of the campus were covered by our curse. Under cover of night, we concluded our act of censure by leaning out the window and screaming an obscenity at Princeton.

The absence of women produced another curious phenomenon. We parodied the mannerisms of men we thought “queer”: we spoke to each other in falsetto voices, stalked each other with limp wrists, touched each other on the leg or neck, and threw “gotchas” and “moons”; then, at the appropriate point, we recoiled and screamed in mock disgust at what we were doing. Perhaps we parodied being gay because, in the absence of women, our lifestyle threatened us. By acting out these little scenarios, we were showing disapproval of our abnormal existence.

Our insensitivities had a broad sweep. One of my six roommates was Chinese, and we constantly teased him about this. We thought it was innocent, locker-room humor, and he laughed and zinged us back. Once, he removed his two false front teeth, donned a Marlon Brando cap and a leather jacket, and took his date, a black woman, to his eating club. There were many at Princeton who thought that black women on Prospect Avenue belonged in waitress uniforms and that, in any event, integration of the races was definitely not appropriate for House Parties. They let him know it in all the subtle ways that people use to disapprove. He flouted their standards. He stood for integrity and decency and courage. Our teasing may have been innocent, but I haven't seen him at a reunion since he graduated.

Shyness is shyness, and insensitivity is insensitivity, and Princeton is not to be blamed for all the problems of adolescence. But I missed women terribly. I missed the opportunity to develop friendships with women, to have close woman friends. I missed the dimension they would have added to the human experience that was Princeton. Here we were, 3,200 undergraduate men milling about the campus, constantly on guard against anything that might be perceived as weakness. Our sensitivities and sensibilities were rough-hewn. We exploited each other's foibles and frailties, cut each other to the bone as we developed locker-room humor to its highest form. We talked all the time, and sometimes the long, late-night confabs became meaningful odysseys toward each other, revealing, however fleetingly, the humanness in each of us. But too often, they began at an acceptable level of self-analysis and ended short of revealing any real emotional need. Almost in spite of ourselves, we grew intellectually and emotionally, but it didn't happen in a natural environment. Without women, our education and our development as people and as men was incomplete.

Today, my son is a senior at a coeducational Princeton. Having women as classmates has not solved all his problems, of course. He has, however, both men and women in his circle of good friends. They room next to each other. They eat together. They hang out with each other when their noses are running, their eyes bleary, when they are dirty or clean, rumpled or coiffed, happy or depressed, laughing or crying. They behave as if they respect each other's intelligence and opinions. Women also hang out with women and men with men, or couples hang out by themselves. Women have made Princeton relevant to our changing society.

They have helped ensure that the institution will be able to respond to the needs and opportunities of the future. They have also brought, as a bonus, the sound of laughter to the campus. In the library, or under a lamp on McCosh Walk, or at the edge of a playing field, students of both genders stand together as friends, laughing, filling the stone courtyards with a sound that twenty-five years ago we almost never heard, except on weekends.

In the final analysis, what I think about most and remember best about Princeton are the extraordinary friendships I developed, beginning with my six roommates. After all these years, we get along as well as, if not better than, ever. Whenever we come together, whatever the circumstances, our conversation picks up where it left off as we resume the same journeys toward each other. These are times not without tension, but it is a marvel that the crucible of Princeton forged such resilient bonds. More than friendships, they are something we might not have called them in the old Princeton, before coeducation: loving relationships. Perhaps that is what Reunions are really about. They are a way of expressing love for friends—those who are here, and those who are not.

All too vividly, I recall one day in the spring of our senior year seeing our classmate Mal Urquhart sitting against a tree at lunchtime on Prospect Avenue. Basking in the sun, he was pale and worn, dying of Hodgkin's disease. He had less than a year to live. Dying—the unspeakable word among young men. That image of him against the tree has remained fixed in my mind and makes me think how lucky we are to have had a twenty-fifth year. I think of my family, so inextricably a part of Princeton; of my roommates and other Princetonians who have been so much a part of my life; and of the institution, of what it is and tries to be. And on spring mornings, when I watch the fresh-faced students streaming by on their way to classes, I think of connections between their Princeton generation and mine. I am presumptuous enough to believe we are alike in some ways: their faces are our faces, alive with the same aspirations and anxieties and the same belief that they can make a difference, that they can do anything, even—and here they are truly different—get dates.

Dan White is the director of the Alumni Council. This essay is adapted from one he wrote for his class's twenty-fifth-reunion book.

For more than 300 years, sailors of Britain's Royal Navy were issued a daily ration of Pusser's Rum (a corruption of "Purser's Rum," referring to the ship's officer who dispensed the grog). Just since 1980 has this legendary rum been available commercially. It is, like the men who drank it, strong in character. Naturally, a rum as such is not for everyone. But rather, for a very small few. Known to those in the know as "The Pusser's Breed."

It took a special drink to bring together men who hadn't bathed in two months.

The romantic days of sail were anything but romantic.

Especially in Britain's Royal Navy.

When a sailor went out to sea, he left civilization far behind. Gone were such luxuries as regular baths.

On the other hand, he did clean up on a rare treasure: our rum.

From as early as 1655, Royal Navy seamen were issued a daily ration of a half pint of rum by the ship's purser (corrupted to "pusser" by the men).

To a jack tar, "Pusser's Rum" was like a breath of fresh air. One swallow and suddenly his existence wasn't so stale after all. Even if his scent was.

The rum ration was so coveted, in fact, that it became currency under various names. Like: Sippers, just a little of your precious ration for somebody to sew on a button, or do a bit of washing. Gulpers, at least half of your tot for one of your friends to do a double shift. See-ers offers, the entire tot.

For this you'd be expected to pull a mate out of the sea. This glorious tradition went on for some 300 years.

Then, risking mutiny, the British Admiralty scrubbed the rum perk in 1970.

But today, that spirit is back.

In British Navy Pusser's Rum. A full, rich, dark, 95.5 proof luxury rum. The very same rum that was standard issue aboard Royal Navy ships. The only difference is, you no longer have to go to sea to get it; you need only chart a course to your local spirits merchant. Or to your favorite watering hole.

Like cognac, Pusser's is best enjoyed neat. For the purpose of mixing we offer an 80 proof Pusser's. A rum that, while lighter, still embodies the rich tradition that is Pusser's. Pick up a bottle and discover this tradition for yourself. Better yet, invite your mates. You'll come out smelling like a rose.

Europeans have long appreciated the remarkable engineering and world-class styling of a Peugeot.

Yet, here in America, a Peugeot 405 is a rare pleasure. Perhaps because a full appreciation of one requires the kind of thorough scrutiny few car buyers exercise.

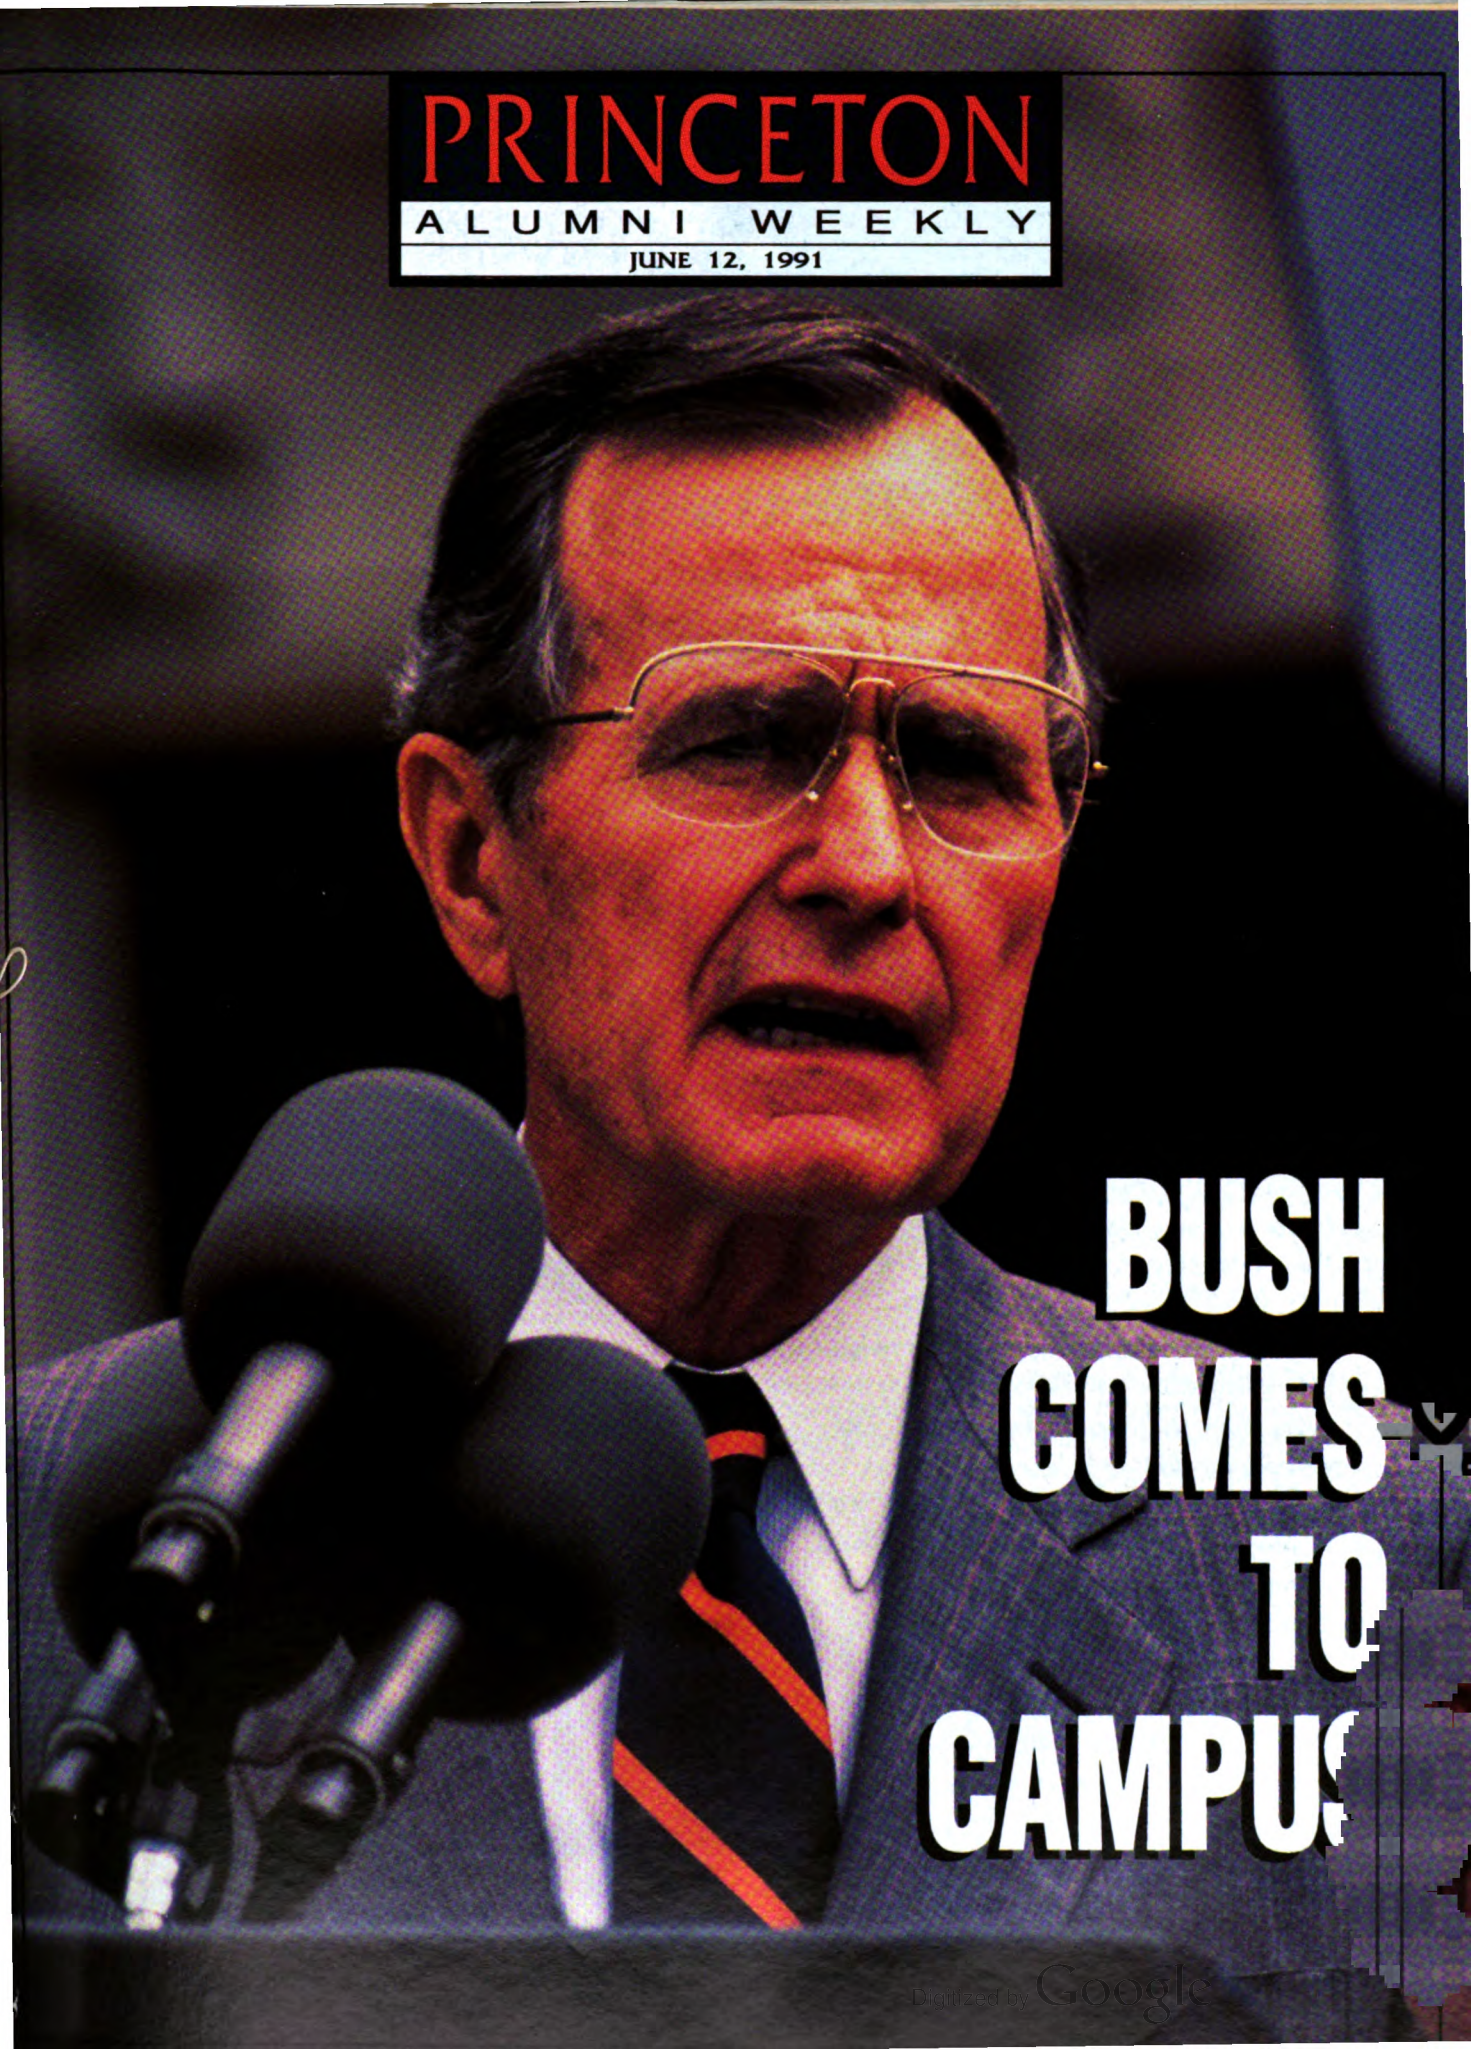

The 405's patented 8-valve shock absorbers, for example, are far from obvious, yet they contribute to the renowned Peugeot road feel that is immediately apparent. Two densities of foam are a subtle but effective way to eliminate seat springs and the road vibrations they transmit. And less obvious still is the sophisticated composite barrier beneath the roof that absorbs road noise.

One thing's for sure, men didn't join the British Royal Navy for the hat.

What lured young men to run away to sea in 1655 is difficult to fathom. The work was hard. The food, abominable.

However, we'd like to suggest that our rum had something to do with it.

From before the days of Lord Nelson, Royal Navy seamen were issued a daily ration of a half a pint of rum by the ship's purser (corrupted to "pusser" by the men).

"Pusser's Rum" was one of the few daily comforts afforded to a jack tar. For all too brief a moment, he was able to forget about his miserable predicament. His mates, no doubt, became more interesting as well.

The rum ration was so coveted, in fact, that it became currency under various names. For example: Sippers, just a little of your precious ration for somebody to sew on a button, or do a bit of washing. Gulpers, at least half your tot for one of your friends to do a double shift. See-ers offers, the entire tot. For this you'd be expected to pull a mate out of the icy North Atlantic. This glorious tradition went on for some 300 years. Then, risking mutiny, the British Admiralty put a cap on the rum perk in 1970.

FROM THE ARCHIVES

On May 11, 1966, President Lyndon B. Johnson dedicated what is now known as Robertson Hall, the home of the Woodrow Wilson School. In our picture, taken shortly after the ceremony, President Robert F. Goheen '40 *48 escorts L.B.J. to his waiting limousine. Prior to the dedication, several hundred students peacefully protested the escalating war in Vietnam. Other students, opposed to the demonstration, pelted the protesters with eggs. Johnson, who spoke on the relationship between the academy and government, mentioned Southeast Asia only in passing.

The Princeton Alumni Weekly is an independent magazine supported by alumni class subscriptions and by paid advertising. Its purpose is to record news of the alumni and at the same time to review without partiality the achievements and problems of the administration, the faculty, and the student body of Princeton University. The views expressed in the Alumni Weekly are those of signed contributors or the editor and do not necessarily represent official positions of the university.

Meet the First Maclean Intern...

Marisa Reuter '92

Home: Houston, TX

Major: Woodrow Wilson School with a certificate in Latin American Studies

Selected as the recipient of the first Maclean Intern sponsored by the Maclean Society of the Alumni Council for students interested in community service, Marisa will spend her summer in community development in Tijuana, Mexico at a pre-school for children of migrant workers.*

A Brief Interview with Marisa:

1. What service-oriented projects have you participated in, either at Princeton or at home?

At home, I was involved at a Houston-based Catholic worker house of hospitality sheltering Central American refugees and Spanish-speaking battered women and children. I was also a Spanish translator at a hospital for cancer patients. At Princeton, I now coordinate and direct the Mercer Street Friends Center, a day care for latchkey minority students in grades K-6; I also work at the Abused Children's Project, which puts University students in contact with three-to-five year olds from the Trenton Day Care Center.

2. Besides service-oriented activities, what other activities have you been involved in at Princeton?

I was on the national and international conference coordinating staffs at Business Today. We organized two forums entitled "Minority Issues in the Workplace" and "The New Workforce." I have participated in two plays and am currently involved in my third for the Latin American theater company Teatro '86. I also work part-time at the Program in Latin American Studies, and have worked in the past at the University Chapel.

3. Why do you want to participate in the Maclean Internship?

The opportunity incorporates my two passions in life: children and Mexico. I am Mexican born and am interested in the challenge of interdependence between Mexico and the United States. In my thesis, I will be focusing on the long-term impact and policy alternatives that need to be considered in view of (1) the increasing 'Hispanization' of the southwest United States by Mexican migrants, and (2) the gradual fusing of the Southwest and northern Mexico into one region. The experience of working and living in Tijuana would therefore be hands on research. I do not exaggerate when I say that there is nothing that I would rather be doing this summer than living in Tijuana working at this school.

Congratulations Marisa, and have a great summer.

 The internship is administered by the Alumni Council Special Committee on Community Service, chaired by Ted Drury '48. For more information, write to the Alumni Council, Box 291, Princeton University, Princeton, N.J. 08544.*

Legacies and Admissions

For nearly two decades, as an undergraduate and graduate, I have resisted the urge to write in after reading yet another letter in PAW from a disgruntled alumnus moaning about the demise of the single wing, the obnoxiousness of the marching band, or, above all, the injustice of the university for not having admitted said alumnus's son or daughter.

After reading the letter from Theodore J. Jacobs '55 in the April 17 PAW, however, I can hold back no longer.

Mr. Jacobs says his first thought upon reading about James Hogue, the ersatz student who fooled the admission office, was, "They have room for a convicted criminal, but not for my son!" One can only wonder how Mr. Jacobs feels about the students the admission office accepted who enrolled, only to drop out or transfer. Or those who failed to finish their theses. Or to maintain a C average. The list goes on and on.

Clearly, the admission office should be omniscient. Failing that, it clearly should offer admission to all alumni sons and daughters, before anyone else, instead of just the current 40-plus percent of alumni children who apply—almost triple the percentage of applicants as a whole who are offered admission.

Better yet, admission should be offered only to the offspring of alumni who can prove their direct descent from those who matriculated at the College of New Jersey in 1746.

Isn't it about time alumni stopped whining when their children aren't admitted to Princeton—and PAW stopped printing letters from those who do? Is Mr. Jacobs's son's life ruined because he did not attend Princeton? Is there no other university in the world where he can obtain an excellent education? Is life over for him at age eighteen?

If my son, now nine, applies to Princeton, fine. If he is offered admission, fine. If he decides to attend, fine. But if not, to any of these three possibilities, fine, too. There is more to life than Princeton. Many people have had successful and happy lives without having attended Princeton.

By the way, my father didn't attend Princeton; he attended Columbia, a school of some merit, I am told. And I was admitted to Princeton twenty years ago despite having been male, having been born in Washington, D.C., and having grown up in a suburb of Chicago.

JOHN JAY WILHEIM '75
Somerville, N.J.

Mr. Jacobs suggests that a person with an "oddball background" has "a better chance of admission than an ordinarily qualified alumni child." Looking at the only statistics available to us, we found that for the Class of 1993, the admission office accepted 48 percent of the legacy applicants, in contrast to 17 percent of the applicant pool as a whole. A little math reveals the acceptance rate for those not the children of alumni to be approximately 15 percent. Accordingly, we object to Mr. Jacobs's argument that "a woman from Iowa" had a better chance of admission than his son; the numbers tell another story.

Admittedly, this discrepancy results from several factors; for instance, the children of alumni are usually better educated than children in the general population and correctly receive some sort of advantage in the admission process. Nevertheless, we cannot agree that legacies should receive an even greater advantage than they currently enjoy.

Mr. Jacobs would do better to focus on the fraudulent nature of the Hogue application rather than his being an "oddball." During our time at Princeton, we all knew a number of "oddballs"—some even from major metropolitan areas—and feel that our undergraduate learning experience would have been lessened if these people had not been present.

Sweater Gaffe

Really! What have we come to when a caption-writer for an Ivy League alumni magazine doesn't know the difference between a vee-neck and a crew-neck sweater? We used to be the arbiters of preppy dress, and when one sees such an obvious gaffe in one's alumni magazine (Sports, April 3), one has to wonder. Shocking, shocking!

Reunion Hall Bricks

Frederick Redpath '39's letter in the March 20 PAW about the twenty-two bricks that framed the fireplace in 9 South Reunion Hall, John F. Kennedy's residence as a freshman in the Class of 1939, jogged memories of my own occupancy of that room, from 1952 to 1955. There are some additional matters that need to be brought to light to complete the historical record. Probably in J.F.K.'s time, but certainly by the 1950s, Reunion Hall had become a bit antiquated as a dormitory. The electrical wiring provided for a central ceiling light in each room, but there were no wall outlets. The aforementioned fireplace in 9 South had been sealed off and plastered over for reasons that could only be surmised, so the fireplace was evident only as a break in the continuity of the wall's molding.

The university provided no furniture for dormitory rooms in those years, so students had to furnish their quarters from scratch. In the fashion of the time, my roommates and I furnished J.F.K.'s erstwhile quarters with beds, desks, and chairs, supplemented the electrical wiring with the necessary extension cords to the floor, and for the most part kept warm with the noisy but effective central steam heating. Still, the closed-off fireplace was a temptation. With enterprise that may have exceeded good judgment, Roger Gridley '56 and I decided that reopening the fireplace would add to the warmth and charm of our living room. So we exposed the hearth and framed the newly opened fireplace with mortar and bricks (how many we can't recall) requisitioned from a building site on the campus. The job was done quickly and quietly enough to go unnoticed by university officials or fire marshals. The fireplace drew well and was used with pleasure and safety on occasions over the next three years, until the upper floors of Reunion Hall were closed for dormitory use.

It seems probable that the twenty-two bricks Mr. Redpath writes of salvaging when Reunion Hall was demolished were actually the results of our renovation. Roger and I in no way regret the use of the bricks as a memorial to John Kennedy, and the inscription on the plaque in 1939 Hall is accurate enough: "These bricks are from the fireplace of 9 South Reunion Hall, the residence as a freshman of John Fitzgerald Kennedy . . ." The next time Roger and I are on the campus, we have agreed to visit the south entry of 1939 Hall to check on our bricks and share a few moments with a former President of the United States.

Alumni Seppuku

The letter from Edward M. Williams '36 in the April 3 PAW bemoans that "Annual Giving wastes money for printing and postage on those who have never given a thin dime and never will, and whose presence on class rolls does nothing except inflate a mythical number . . ." He complains that his earlier suggestion to the Alumni Council to prune "dead wood" from alumni rolls was not well received; now he suggests that "peripheral members" of a class be asked "if they wish to retain a connection with Princeton," as though that connection were a capricious favor subject to withdrawal, rather than an immutable fact.

First of all, I was not aware that a disinclination to participate in Annual Giving renders one's presence on the class rolls a myth. Obviously, one either is or is not a member of a Princeton class. One's subsequent inclination and ability to give (or the lack thereof), or one's participation in class affairs or activities (or the lack of it), cannot alter facts or rewrite history. Princeton's class rolls are not a pre-glasnost Soviet encyclopedia. Heaven forbid that Mr. Williams (or anyone

It would seem, in the last year or two, that some astounding things are happening. And while we wouldn't presume to place our new Tiptronic automatic transmission on the same level of import as the crumbling of the Berlin Wall, the news does seem to leave people somewhat stunned.

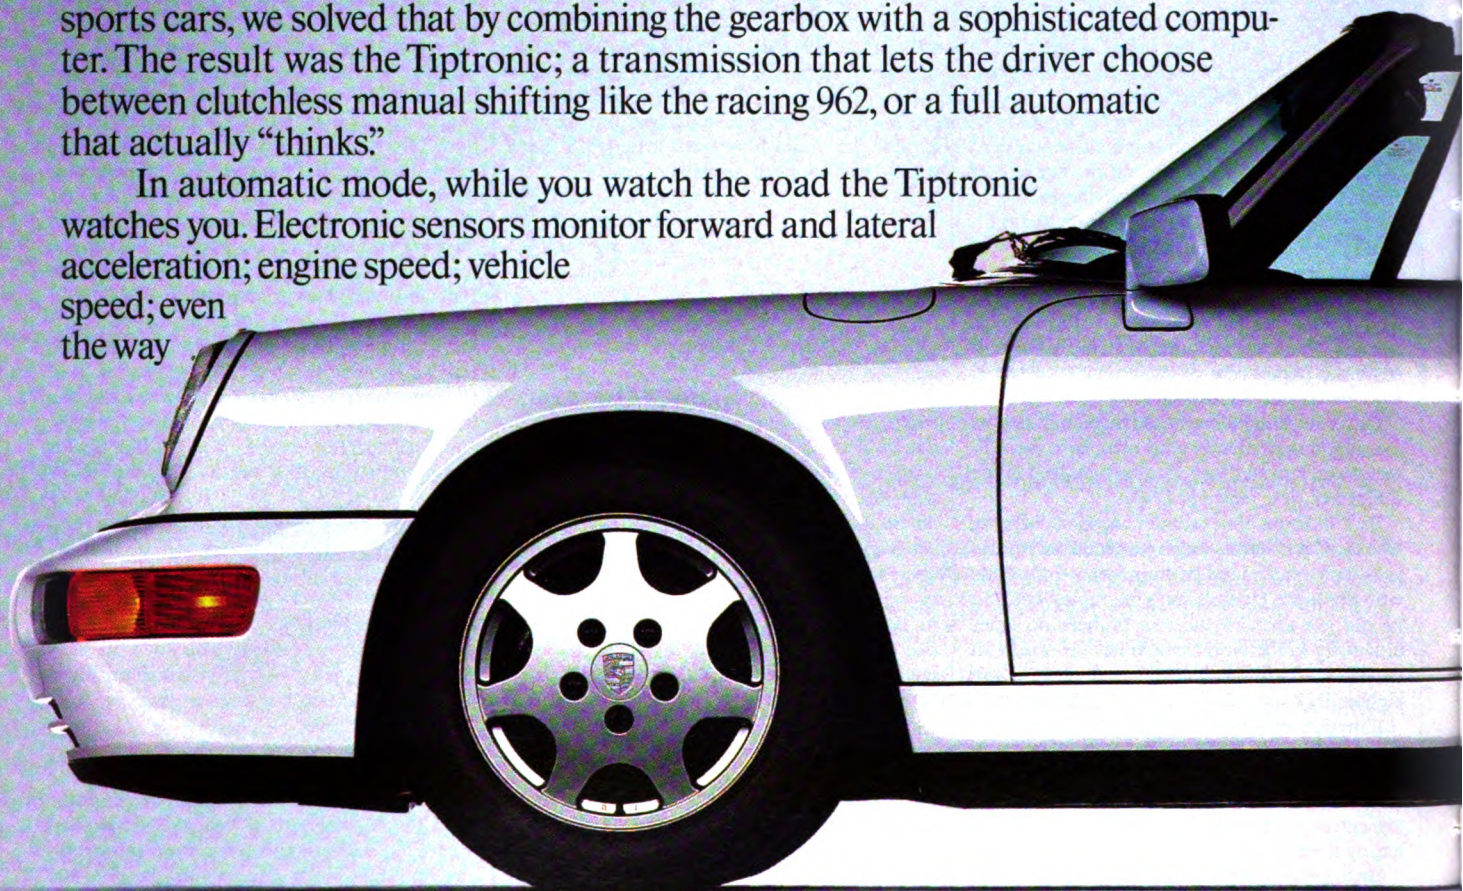

An automatic in the world's classic performance sports car?

The simple fact is, automatics have always been a good idea. After all, if you don't have to let up on the power, and depress another pedal, you should be able to drive even harder, right? Professor Porsche has long believed this, and has long led the search for a true high performance version of this concept.

That was the idea when our Type 962 racing car teams developed a clutchless transmission they could shift with a simple flick of a lever. The result was a flurry of championships.

Still, the race drivers had to shift. The car couldn't sense what they wanted to do. For our sports cars, we solved that by combining the gearbox with a sophisticated computer. The result was the Tiptronic; a transmission that lets the driver choose between clutchless manual shifting like the racing 962, or a full automatic that actually "thinks."

In automatic mode, while you watch the road the Tiptronic watches you. Electronic sensors monitor forward and lateral acceleration; engine speed; vehicle speed; even the way you are working the throttle. The car determines how aggressively you wish to drive, then chooses the proper shifting style from among five different "maps," adjusting continuously every 30 to 100 milliseconds.

Go into a hard turn with a typical automatic and let off the throttle, and the car will upshift, reducing your control. The Tiptronic reads the aggressive cornering forces and prevents such an upshift. The same choice you would make if you were shifting.

When you want to take over, slip the shifter through a channel to the manual side. Then just "tip," the shifter forward for upshifts and backward for downshifts. You needn't pause or let off the power. In fact, 8 of 10 of our Porsche test-drivers had faster laps with the Tiptronic in manual mode than they had with a straight stick.

A test-drive is so convincing that over 40% of all Carrera 2 Cabriolets now being bought are Tiptronics. Of course, only your own test-drive at an authorized Porsche dealer can actually prove to you how stunning this new concept is. Suffice it to say that Automobile Magazine named it Technology of the Year, saying, "Of all the good ideas that have popped up recently...Tiptronic...will have the most profound effect on future cars."

A Porsche having a profound effect on the future. Well, at least you know some things aren't going to change.

else) should be empowered to declare a "peripheral alumnus"—whatever that unflattering designation may mean—a nonperson.

Mr. Williams cites the case of John F. Kennedy, who was asked by members of his class whether he wished to remain on the rolls, because he had left Princeton after a very short time and had declared thereafter that he owed his loyalty to Harvard. Given the circumstances, the Class of 1939's action was eminently reasonable, and so was Mr. Kennedy's reply, requesting that his name be removed from the rolls. But to suggest that it would be an appropriate policy to encourage so-called "deadbeats" to volunteer to commit a sort of alumni-roster seppuku goes beyond the illogical and the inappropriate, and arrives resoundingly at the outrageous.

If other members of the Alumni Council, present or past, share Mr. Williams's attitude, it is little wonder that some alumni choose to be inactive. Their choice, however, is no justification for asking them to jump down the nearest memory hole. More seriously, the sheer crassness of Mr. Williams's letter is breathtaking. Does one purchase a place on a class roll by virtue of subsequent activity rather than historical fact? I am not aware that Princeton was ever in the business of selling admission or degrees. Is Mr. Williams now suggesting that it should go into the business of selling alumni status, or of blackmailing people into retaining it?

DANIEL F. GOLDMAN '70

Anyone who has attended Princeton can ask to be dropped from university or class mailing lists, but I doubt that many do. The university's attitude toward alumni and communicating with them is, I suspect, like our attitude toward our teeth and brushing: we brush only the ones we want to keep.

Yecch!

After reading the letters about Woodrow Wilson in the PAW of March 6, it occurred to me that the following anecdote about my late father-in-law, William Harris, Jr., of the Class of 1892, might be of interest. Harris was a great admirer of Wilson and hung a large picture of him over his desk in Chiang Mai, Thailand, where he was head of Prince Royal's College.

One day he looked at the picture and thought that the eyes appeared rather peculiar. On investigation, he found that termites had emerged from the wooden wall behind it and had eaten out the eyes.

THE RENTSCHLER REPORT

"AMERICA IS DROWNING IN PABLUM, and that's why I'm publishing The Rentschler Report" says Editor & Publisher Bill Rentschler '49, former "Prince" chairman and award-winning community journalist.

"The mass media are homogenized, corporatized, dominated by 'herdthink' and largely committed to the agenda of the Fortune 500. The press and TV functioned as giddy cheerleaders, rather than hard-eyed analysts, of the Gulf War. They have already anointed Bush for a second term in '92. This is neither the intended nor proper role of a free independent press.

"The pressing domestic agenda is unmet, not even seriously addressed. We are literally faced with the daunting task of 'REmaking America' in the '90s.

"The Rentschler Report will bring you in compact newsletter format a tough, independent, non-ideological source of analysis, commentary, and trustworthy reporting for people who think and care. Like most Princetonians."

blue, the streets were clean, and the common cold absent from Mercer County. Notwithstanding, the N.I.T. was then, as it had been for many years, a consolation tournament. The only reason that Princeton was in it was that the Tigers weren't good enough to win the Ivy League. It was wonderful that Pete Carril's troops won. They were a game and noble lot, and they whipped teams more naturally accomplished.

But the N.I.T. was still only basketball's equivalent of the Peach Bowl, and Carry—as a professional journalist, not a professional cheerleader—allotted the story just what it deserved on a national basis.

Gays in Class Notes

Skimming through the class notes in the April 3 PAW, I happened on a reassuring entry from the Class of 1977: a note from a lesbian couple announcing the birth of their daughter. I have always wondered about the dearth of news from gay and lesbian alumni. Because I know we exist in fairly significant numbers, I wasn't sure if it has been PAW's policy not to print such notes, or if gay and lesbian alumni just don't feel comfortable sharing their lives in this forum. I felt relieved after reading the note; it suggests that PAW might be a place where gay and lesbian alumni can be seen and heard after all.

Ells in the Chapel

The article titled "More Ellis in the Chapel" (PAW, February 20) contains an inaccuracy concerning Ralph Adams Cram, the principal architect of the Princeton University Chapel. Cram was not, as the article states, an alumnus of Yale. The son of a New Hampshire clergyman, Cram attended no college, but rather apprenticed in the architectural firm of Rotch and Tilden, in Boston.

The Riot of '63

Your "From the Archives" in the April 17 PAW, concerning the riot of 1963, brought back one of my favorite Princeton memories.

On the evening of May 6, 1963, with the weather beautiful, theses completed, and graduation a short time away, Jim Swire '63 and I wandered up to Nassau Street to grab something to eat. One of us remarked that this would be a wonderful evening for a riot. It was therefore with a bemused sense of awe—and perhaps thoughts about the power of ESP—that we crossed the street and walked onto the campus ducking toilet-paper missiles streaming overhead. Fortunately for us, we remained mobile observers and headed for our rooms.

Viewed later, in the cold light of day, the riot went on too long and went too far, and the aftermath cast a discernible pall on our graduation. Nonetheless, there was something wonderful—using the word in its archaic sense—about the events of that evening. Many students shared the same thoughts that evening, as if this impulse had been somehow communicated through the ether. Briefly, I held to the irresistible conceit that we had caused the riot by thoughts alone. From the perspective of my putative maturity, I know this isn't so, and I would not be surprised to read in PAW the same claim by others, now that the statute of limitations has run out.

The Writing Center

I could not help but cringe when I read, in Gayle Wald GS's article on the Writing Center (On the Campus, March 20), that "nobody can write by themselves." Themselves? Perhaps Ms. Wald and Judy Failer GS, who spoke these words, should attend one of the center's tutoring sessions!

NAN MONCHARSH REINER '77
Alexandria, Va.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Few people—even among Princetonians—speak perfect English in conversation, and it's ordinarily not our practice to correct colloquial usages quoted in the magazine.

Your article on the Writing Center perpetuates an error that has done a great deal of harm to our educational system in the recent past and that refuses to die decently.

The writer presents a false etymology for "educate," asserting it comes from the Latin verb educere, "to draw out." This interpretation has made it convenient (and easy) for educationists to explain that a teacher doesn't really have to teach anything, let alone ask that students learn something: all that is necessary is to draw out little minds along the right paths.

One of the troubles with this fallacy is that "educate" derives not from the third conjugation educere but from the first conjugation educare, which means, appropriately enough, "to teach." This is yet one more example of a beautiful hypothesis being slain by an ugly fact. It was, by the way, the aforementioned educationists who discouraged the teaching of Latin.

Although I wish all success to the new Writing Center (heaven knows, students have always needed such help), I do hope it will offer some opportunity for the study of etymology.

Bush Dedicates Social-Science Complex, Receives Honorary Doctorate of Laws

The dedication took place in front of the recently renovated Corwin Hall.

ON MAY 10, Princeton witnessed the media matchup of the year. In one corner, standing 6'2" and weighing 190 pounds, surrounded by distinguished guests, teleprompters, and expensive floral arrangements, was George Herbert Walker Bush, the forty-first president of the United States, appearing in public for the first time since a thyroid condition had caused atrial fibrillation in his heart a week earlier.

And in the other corner, partially hidden behind green security partitions, weighing in at four stories and 50,000 square feet, stood the brand-new Fisher/Bendheim social-sciences building.

The President, who was in town for just two hours to dedicate the building, looked a tad underweight and tired. The building, by contrast, was fresh and robust, and figured to be around forever.

It was no contest. It's impossible to compete with the President (known acronymically as "POTUS" to his Secret Service bodyguards), but devotees of the building, designed by Princeton's favorite architect, Robert Venturi '47 '50, needn't worry. Nearby Robertson Hall, home of the Woodrow Wilson School, was similarly upstaged by Lyndon B. Johnson in 1966, the last time a sitting president visited. But the Wilson School's since made a name for itself.

After weeks of anticipation and preparation, the campus had to wait a few extra minutes for the presidential party, which included First Lady Barbara Bush ("FLOTUS") and Chief of Staff John Sununu. The helicopters from McGuire Air Force Base, where Air Force One had landed, touched down in Palmer Stadium ten minutes late, and Bush's limousine finally entered the security tent at the entrance on the west side of Nassau Hall around 10:10 A.M. Inside the cramped Faculty Room, President Harold Shapiro and James A. Henderson '56, the chairman of the board of trustees' executive committee, presided over a brief ceremony in which the Yale graduate received a doctorate of laws, Princeton's 2,179th honorary degree and the seventeenth awarded to an American president.

University orator Edmund N. Carpenter II '43 read the citation: "Smooth fielding son of our older sister to the north, he was raised in the finest tradition of public service. Apprenticed in a series of distinguished posts—from Capitol Hill to Beijing to the shores of Manhattan's East River—he has ascended to a pinnacle of national and international leadership at a time of sweeping change and complex challenge. Resolute yet compassionate, consultative yet decisive, his commitment to enduring values and his search for a new global vision have earned the support of this nation and the respect of others. We salute him for a lifetime spent in the nation's service, and proudly add him as a member of the extended Princeton family."

In brief remarks at Nassau Hall, the President alluded to the audible anti-Bush rally on the other side of Cannon Green as the "rites of spring." That served as a reminder that not everyone was pleased by the presence of the Oval Officer.

The noisy protest, and the subsequent "Rally for an Alternative Agenda" that coincided with the dedication ceremony, at 11:15, climaxed weeks of campus debate over the propriety of Bush's visit. Nearly seven hundred students and members of the faculty had signed a letter protesting the honorary degrees for Bush and Secretary of State James A. Baker '52 (to be conferred at Commencement). They contended that these honors could not help but be interpreted as endorsements of the Gulf War and Bush Administration policies.

Many protesters also objected to the unusual way in which the university had decided to grant the degree. To some it appeared that the degree was a quid pro quo for Bush's attendance at the dedication, and that the decision had circumvented the established approval process.

It is true that Bush's degree was approved in a highly unusual fashion. The only hard and fast rule about Princeton's honorary degrees is that the recipients must be present to receive them. Almost all recipients are recommended by the board of trustees' Committee on Honorary Degrees, which includes faculty members and students serving on the U-Council, and are then voted upon by the full board. Because Bush's appointments are generally not scheduled more than three months in advance, however, the timing of his degree-approval process fell between the board's January and April meetings. The university therefore invoked a little-used clause in its bylaws that permits the approval of honorary degrees by a unanimous vote of the board's executive committee.

A variety of protesters greeted Bush.

During the degree presentation, about 100 protesters between Whig and Clio halls shook placards, banged pots, and wielded bullhorns to voice their opposition to Bush's policies on such issues as civil rights, national health care, reproductive rights, and many, many more. New chants, like "Fight, fight, fight, abortion is a human right" and "George Bush, stay out of mine," broke out every few minutes. The students were joined by protesters from New Jersey political groups, including the Coalition for Nuclear Disarmament and the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power (ACT-UP), an activist AIDS-awareness organization.

After riding to Fisher/Bendheim through the streets of Princeton, Bush posed briefly inside Corwin Hall for photographs with twenty-six major donors to the new and renovated buildings. At 11:05, he stepped out onto a dais in front of Corwin, and the dedication ceremony began. The university orchestra struck up "Hail to the Chief" under brightening skies. First, Dean of the Chapel Joseph C. Williamson delivered an invocation that admonished the audience not to "gloss over the human tragedy" of the Gulf War and "the suffering which continues in its wake." By contrast, James J. Florio, the Democratic governor of New Jersey and an ex-officio Princeton trustee, congratulated the Republican chief executive for "a job well done" in Iraq, and received a round of applause.

Bush drew appreciative laughter from the audience when he opened his speech with savvy references to Princeton's Nude Olympics (held at the first snowfall) and George Shultz '42's gluteal tattoo. He then spent the rest of his thirteen-minute speech discussing the Constitution and Congress's attempts to "micromanage the executive branch" (see excerpts). He defended his administration's domestic policies, and ended with a Reaganesque call for line-item veto power.

To the many onlookers who had hoped to hear a major address on policy, the speech was generally disappointing. The "big five" news outlets—ABC, CBS, NBC, CNN, and the MacNeil-Lehrer News-Hour—mentioned the event that evening, but even university spokesmen acknowledged that the wide coverage was prompted mainly by Bush's health problems. The Wall Street Journal was perhaps alone in finding wheat among the chaff: the paper's lead editorial on May 15 quoted Bush's speech and praised him for vetoing six bills that would have weakened presidential powers.

About 11:40, the President finished speaking. POTUS and FLOTUS were whisked back to Washington immediately. The presidential helicopter and two decoys left Palmer Stadium, playing an aerial shell game with the nation's commander-in-chief. The audience dispersed, leaving stragglers to contemplate Princeton's newest landmark.

Fisher and Bendheim halls house the economics department and the Wilson School's Center of International Studies, respectively. Their construction, together with the renovation of Corwin Hall, which contains the politics department, cost $20 million, and transformed the academic space around the Woodrow Wilson School into the "social sciences complex." Visitors may be hard pressed to figure out if Fisher/Bendheim is one building or two: the new halls are attached to Corwin and share an exterior of brick and limestone and an interior of oak and plate glass, and color-coded room numbers are needed to clarify the boundaries be-

A New European Order

LATE IN 1989, while the Soviet Union's hegemony in Eastern Europe was crumbling, and many of the causes of the Cold War were vanishing, Walter Lippincott '60, the director of Princeton University Press, asked Richard Ullman how he could resist writing a book about these unexpected and dramatic events in a part of the world that has long been his focus. Not surprisingly, Ullman, a professor at the Woodrow Wilson School, couldn't resist Lippincott's proposal, and this spring, P.U.P. published Securing Europe.

Ullman's countenance is sober as he tells the history of the book, but his words are bluntly optimistic. "I found the events of the summer and fall of 1989 the most exciting of my whole life," he says. "And they gave me the most reason ever to hope that the patterns of the past were at last breaking up. It really became apparent that the changes affected Europe fundamentally and that possibilities were opening for the creation of a wholly new security structure."

Ullman, the David K. E. Bruce '19 Professor of International Affairs, insists that Securing Europe reveals no new findings; the book is an essay, he says, not the result of research or reportage. But his basic proposition is startling and challenging: "It says that the chances for a major war in Europe are just about nil, and that that's the most profound change in international relations as we have known them for about three hundred years."

Securing Europe, whose writing was supported by the Twentieth Century Fund, isn't so much about the revolutionary changes in the East, as where those changes have brought Europe—and how the opportunity for peace may be seized. War has devastated Europe repeatedly for centuries, but Ullman contends that the end of the Cold War, combined with a host of new communications and weapons technologies, nearly rules out a return of this scourge. The liberation of Eastern Europe eliminated at one stroke the greatest threats to Europe's peace. The Soviet government no longer fears that its legitimacy is tied to that of the regimes it installed there, and newly reunified Germany is now committed to Europe's territorial status quo.

"There exists among European states today a stronger impetus than ever before to seek security through cooperation," he writes. "That is because of an acute and widespread awareness of both the devastation and the unprofitability of war. . . . And there seems to be a steadily growing realization among all the major European governments that, now and for the foreseeable future, they face no problems that they might be able to solve by using military force to expand the extent of their political control."

Ullman confesses to unabashed optimism, but his vision of peace in Europe does not hinge entirely on rosy assumptions. Even if the Soviet government again became repressive and authoritarian, he writes, the transformations of the last two years are irreversible. As he puts it, "Violence will certainly continue to be part of international politics, and during the decades ahead there will undoubtedly be violent conflicts within Europe—even, perhaps, between neighboring European states. But those conflicts will be narrowly confined. They will not escalate or widen."

Nor does Ullman assume that the rest of the world will be peaceful; it won't. But none of these inevitable wars elsewhere will draw European nations into the fray on opposite sides, or escalate into conflicts between the superpowers, he says.

Ullman's book focuses on new opportunities in Europe, but he concludes with a glance at a problem elsewhere that, in the absence of a European arms race, may now be addressed—the "seemingly endemic" poverty of the Third World. "The technology to change these conditions exists. What has been lacking is a sense of priority and of proportion. For forty-five years the contest between the two superpower-led blocs came first and soaked up resources, energy, and talent as each side systematically overestimated both the capabilities and the intentions of the other," Ullman writes. "Now it is possible to make up for lost time."

tween Corwin, Bendheim, and Fisher. They do, however, have separate entrances—and separate donors.

What's in a name? Money, it seems. The new building's monikers honor the $5 million gift of Donald G. and Doris F. Fisher and their three alumni sons, and the $2.5 million gift of Robert A. Bendheim '37's Lowenstein Foundation. Robert E. Jacoby '51's gift of $2 million provided Fisher Hall's sun-lit Jacoby Library, which overlooks Prospect Avenue, and the plaza was refurbished and renamed in honor of Edward W. Scudder '03 by his sons, Edward W. '35 and Richard S. '35. They provided $2 million.

Pity poor Corwin Hall. Originally named Wilson Hall, it lost its name, its site, and the prestigious Wilson School in 1963, when it was moved to make way for the building now called Robertson Hall. After years of living in the shadow of its well-endowed sister, Corwin's identity has receded further with its incorporation into the new complex. But it did savor a beam of limelight on May 10, playing host to Princeton's biggest attraction of the last twenty-five years.

How Princeton Hosted the Prez

GOD, SAID EINSTEIN, is in the details, and there were undoubtedly moments during the myriad preparations for President Bush's visit when the university wished a Supreme Being would offer to take care of some of them. Instead, Princeton settled for White House staffers.

Preparations for the presidential visit began even before the White House officially announced, on April 9, that Bush would travel to Princeton. Robert K. Durkee '69, the university's vice-president for public affairs, and H. Kirk Unruh '70, the director of development relations, devised the basic outline of the visit in consultation with the White House: Bush would come to dedicate Fisher/Bendheim halls, make a speech, and meet in private with the major donors for a "photo-opportunity." The university also offered the President an honorary degree, after it became clear that the White House would hold Princeton to the precedent set by President Johnson's degree when he visited the university, in 1966. In any event, according to university spokesmen, the White House considers the distinction a customary aspect of presidential visits.

Secret Service agents arrived at the end of March to assess the President's vulnerability during the dedication ceremony, and found conditions adequate. On April 27, a Pre-Advance Team from the White House came to look over the university's plans, and gave the thumbs up. Meanwhile, the grounds and building maintenance department worked quickly to spruce up the newly renamed Scudder Plaza. A contractor blasted hot water under high pressure to remove years of accumulated grime from the plaza's limestone paving. Maintenance crews built temporary electrical substations for television transmission trucks, and erected several tents as security checkpoints—all told, the rough equivalent of preparing three Reunions sites, according to Robert D. Smart, the department director. They also set up seating for about 750 spectators. To prepare for Bush's arrival, the maintenance department alone racked up $25,000 in expenses, part of which the White House has offered to pay.

The first major glitch occurred after the White House's Advance Team arrived on Sunday, May 5. After examining the arrangements for the dedication ceremony, the White House staff gently insisted that the dais, built near the entrance to Bendheim Hall at the southeast corner of Scudder Plaza, be moved. Not only did this location leave the President's back exposed to Prospect Avenue, but the orientation of the sun was likely to cause glare on his teleprompters. Crews hastily built a new platform on the steps of Corwin Hall. That, in turn, required hip-booted workmen to throw a catwalk across the plaza's pool for the television cameras and news photographers.

After allocating most of the seats to distinguished guests, faculty and staff members, and journalists, the university distributed 250 tickets to students chosen by lottery a few days before the event. For students who lost out in the lottery, the university arranged closed-circuit simulcasts of the dedication in McCosh 10 and several other auditoriums. For those who preferred to protest Bush's presence, the dean of students' office negotiated with the "George Bush Reception Committee" to locate its rallies close enough to each ceremony to be heard, but not so close as to disturb the proceedings. The university was taking no chances that the President's speech might be disrupted: the pool's fountain and its circulation system were both shut off while Bush was speaking, and all the smoke detectors in nearby buildings were disconnected.

The most conspicuous preparations, of course, involved security. By the time the President arrived, about forty Secret Service agents with sunglasses and earphones were prowling the campus. Joining them were 130 Princeton Borough police, state police, and university proctors. Bomb-detection crews with dogs swept the upper campus for explosives, requiring maintenance workers to pry open manhole covers. "Spotters" with oversized binoculars stood sentry on the roofs of Frick and Robertson halls. Guests at both ceremonies had to pass through metal-detecting magnetometers, or "mags."

Police cordoned off the President's route from Nassau Hall to Fisher/Bendheim with yellow tape and closed the roads to traffic. Newspaper-vending machines and trash cans, which might have hidden bombs, were removed from the streets. FitzRandolph Gateway in front of Nassau Hall, open since 1970, was closed and locked.

The White House press office got its licks in, too. Although the university's communications office was generally happy to meet the needs of the White House press corps, the two offices were at times working at cross-purposes. While TV camera crews were setting up in Nassau Hall's dim Faculty Room for the degree ceremony, they discovered that their spotlights produced glare off the portraits of George Washington and King George II. When the cameramen suggested that the two-hundred-year-old paintings be removed, however, they were informed that the chances of that were "zero."

To be fair, the visitors from Washington contributed more to the preparations than demands and criticism. Bush arrived, after all, with his own podium.

Bush Speaks

President Bush's remarks in Princeton on May 10 were part civics lesson—how the Constitution allocates power between the executive and legislative branches—and part campaign speech—how Congress continually tries to frustrate the presidential will. Here are excerpts from his address.

THE MOST COMMON CHALLENGE to presidential powers comes from a predictable source, represented here by several able members of the United States Congress.

Although our founders never envisioned a Congress that would churn out hundreds of thousands of pages worth of reports and hearings and documents and laws every year, they did understand that legislators would try to accumulate power. James Madison, your son—Princeton's son—warned that "The legislative department is everywhere extending the sphere of its activity, and drawing all power into its impetuous vortex." That was Mr. Madison speaking, not President Bush speaking.

Sometimes this sort of competition falls entirely within the bounds of the Constitution. But consider the unnecessary requests and requirements that can waste the time and energy of the executive.

Thirty years ago, we devoted nearly 9.5 percent of our gross national product to defense expenditures. And today, defense spending accounts for only 5.3 percent of our G.N.P. But congressional oversight has grown exponentially. One hundred and seven committees and subcommittees—107—oversee defense programs and spending. For Fiscal Year 1989, the Pentagon devoted five hundred man-years and over $50 million just to write reports responding to congressional queries on such items as plans for manning tugboats and accounting for the number of bands.

Defense staff has to respond yearly to more than 750,000 congressional staff inquiries. Other executive agencies exhaust their time and energy, often giving identical testimony to a whole battery of subcommittees and committees.

Oversight, when properly exercised, helps keep the executive accountable. But when it proliferates wildly, it can confuse the public and make it more difficult for Congress and the president to do their jobs properly.

The chief executive also preserves, protects, and defends the Constitution through the use of the veto power.

Six times in my presidency, I have vetoed bills that would have weakened presidential powers. In one case, for instance, Congress wanted to make the president disclose a wide variety of sensitive diplomatic contacts and discussions, as well as private discussions with the executive branch—and would have threatened to impose criminal sanctions on a wide range of normal diplomatic activities. I noted in my veto message that "The result would be a dangerous timidity and disarray in the conduct of U.S. foreign policy. Such a result is wholly contrary to the allocation of powers under the Constitution."

Elsewhere, Congress has also taken aggressive action against specific presidential powers, including the power to appoint or remove employees who serve at the president's pleasure. It sometimes tries to manage the executive branch—micromanage the executive branch—by writing too-specific directions for carrying out a particular law. And when this happens, the president has a constitu-

"I decided to advance my bequest to Princeton by establishing a life income plan."

If you have thoughtfully provided for Princeton in your will, perhaps you would consider "advancing" your bequest through a life income plan.

Let's say you've earmarked $25,000 of your Ivy stock for Princeton upon your death and the stock presently pays a dividend of 3–4 percent. If you were to donate it now, you'd receive a current charitable deduction, and increase your income as well. (Our Growth Fund presently pays 5–5½ percent and our Income Fund, 7½–8 percent.)

tional obligation to protect his office—and to veto the legislation. In addition, on many occasions during my presidency, I have stated that statutory provisions that violate the Constitution have no binding legal force. . . .

Presidents define themselves through their exercise of presidential power. They must use their special authority to serve the whole nation in matters of foreign and domestic policy. They must set a tone for governance, at once leading the people, yet following their desires. They must preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution. And they must encourage deliberative behavior on the part of Congress.

But the real power of the presidency lies in a president's ability to frame, through action, through example, through encouragement, what we as a nation must do—what is required of communities and institutions, large and small, in schools and factories and the hundreds of daily acts of individuals.

The great joy and challenge of the office I occupy . . . is that the president serves not just as the unitary executive, but hopefully as a unifying executive.

Mrs. Wertenbaker Dies at 100

SARAH MARSHALL WERTENBAKER, the widow of Thomas Jefferson Wertenbaker, a long-time professor of history, died on May 1 in Princeton after a brief illness. She was 100.

A native of Lexington, Kentucky, Mrs. Wertenbaker had resided in Princeton ever since her marriage, in 1916. Professor Wertenbaker came to the university in 1910 as a preceptor and went on to become one of Princeton's most popular faculty members, a distinguished historian, and the author of the definitive history of the university. He taught for thirty-seven years, until his retirement in 1947, and died in 1966.

Mrs. Wertenbaker was equally dedicated to campus and community. She attended every Commencement from 1917 until 1990, excepting only those years when she accompanied her husband to temporary postings at other universities. Dozens of her husband's former students remained in touch with her over the years. She also faithfully attended the annual commissioning of Princeton's new R.O.T.C. officers, rarely missing the ceremony since the unit was formed, in 1919. Last July, on the occasion of her 100th birthday, the university's Tiger Battalion named her an honorary member.

Wei Named Engineering School Dean; Stokes to Quit as Wilson School Dean

AFTER A SIX-MONTH search, James Wei, a chemical-engineering professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, was appointed to succeed Hisashi Kobayashi '67 as the dean of the School of Engineering and Applied Science. Wei, who will begin his five-year term on July 1, headed the chemical-engineering department at M.I.T. from 1977 to 1988, and has taught there since 1977.

Wei, sixty, is an expert on catalysis and reaction engineering, which involves problem solving in such fields as materials manufacturing and pollution control. Wei has said he would like to broaden the engineering school's exploration of technology's contributions to environmentalism and other social concerns, but he declined to discuss his specific ideas until he has conferred with faculty members and students. "I would like to emphasize Princeton's interaction with the nation's problems," he said in an interview. "I look forward to working closely with the school of sciences, even the school of humanities . . . the education of engineers in the future should not be narrowly focused on technology."

In his career, Wei has accumulated extensive experience in both academia and private industry. He did his undergraduate work at the Georgia Institute of Technology and received his doctorate in chemical engineering at M.I.T. in 1955. From 1955 until 1970, he worked for Mobil Oil as research chemical engineer, senior scientist, and manager of long-range analysis. In 1962-63, he was a visiting associate professor at Princeton. He has also taught at the California Institute of Technology and the University of Delaware. The author or coauthor of ninety-eight scientific papers, Wei has won his field's two top awards, conferred by the American Institute of Chemical Engineers.

Wei has also compiled a formidable record of contact with the federal government. From 1972 to 1974, for example, he chaired the catalyst panel of the National Academy of Sciences' Committee on Motor Vehicle Emissions, which recommended the installation of pollution-fighting catalytic converters in American automobiles. From 1976 to 1979, he served on an Environmental Protection Agency advisory committee. "I believe my contacts in Washington will be very helpful in charting the future of Princeton," he said.

Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs since 1974, announced on May 13 that he was resigning his post. In a memorandum to the Wilson School faculty, Stokes said he would stay on as dean until the end of the 1991-92 academic year, and intends to continue teaching. President Shapiro later said he planned to appoint a search committee next fall to find a successor.

Stokes's decision came in the middle of his fourth five-year term as dean. In his memo, Stokes noted that when Shapiro had asked him to serve a fourth term, Stokes had informed him that he might not complete the full five years. "I wanted to pass on the leadership of this flourishing institution when the time felt right," Stokes said, "rather than when my formal term was at an end."

Stokes came to the Wilson School after a three-year stint as the dean of the graduate school at the University of Michigan, where he taught from 1958 to 1974. During his tenure as dean, the Wilson School doubled its faculty and increased its endowment fivefold. A gradual expansion of the school's physical space was capped recently by the construction of Bendheim Hall, the permanent home of the school's Center of International Studies.

James Wei

The sixty-four-year-old dean plans to take a one-year sabbatical after he steps down, but will return to teach. He is currently writing a book on science policy that will be published next year by the Brookings Institution. In it, he argues that scientific research is hampered by a misconception in both the scientific and policymaking communities that basic and applied research are necessarily distinct. During Stokes's tenure, science and technology in public affairs have become significant elements in the Wilson School's curriculum.

Students Sleep Through Bush's Visit; Much Ado About Nothing, Some Call It

IN THE MIDST of all the hype over George Bush's trip to Princeton in May, it was amusing to recall that the visit almost coincided with the hundredth anniversary of the death of "The World's Greatest Showman," P. T. Barnum, the man who transformed hype into a science. Much like Barnum's polished fakery, Bush's intensely packaged, carefully orchestrated visit to receive an honorary degree and dedicate the new social-science complex was more surface than substance. Given the extensive preparations and the campus debate about whether Bush deserved an honorary degree, the actual ceremonies seemed markedly anticlimactic.

Of course, it didn't help that Bush's heralded appearance occurred on the Friday of the first week of reading period, and was over before noon. As anyone familiar with the waking habits of the average Princeton student would know, much of the campus celebrated the visit of the nation's chief executive by sleeping through it. Neither did Bush himself do much to add to the profundity of the occasion. His address was over in less than fifteen minutes, and with the exception of references to Princeton's Nude Olympics (celebrated at each winter's first snow) and the much-publicized posterior of George Shultz '42, it sounded much like an ordinary campaign speech. The consensus of those who watched the dedication ceremony on a simulcast in McCosh 50 was a bipartisan "That's it!"

Similarly, "The George Bush Reception Committee," a group formed to oppose the President's visit and his receipt of an honorary degree, didn't produce a particularly vivid protest. Ambiguously worded fliers invited the concerned public to protest unspecified "Bush policies," and a banner strung across McCosh Walk intoned "Bush's honor is Princeton's dishonor," but no clear focus emerged from the several protests. In the weeks before Bush arrived, there had been extended debate about the propriety of the university's decision to grant the degree, but the nineteen speakers beneath the "Alternative Agenda" banner criticized Bush on issues ranging from the Gulf War to domestic health care.

Of course, the security requirements of Bush's stay prevented protesters from any sort of actual confrontation with the President. During the honorary-degree ceremony, in Nassau Hall, Bush acknowledged the noisy protesters between Whig and Clio halls with a blithe reference to "the rites of spring," but a larger group in 1879 Arch went unnoticed by participants in the dedication ceremony, in front of Corwin Hall. Members of ACT-UP, the aggressively confrontational AIDS-protest group, tossed red-stained effigies representing people who had died of AIDS onto Washington Road, but police officers either quickly removed the figures or studiously ignored them.

T-men: ready for anything.

The hype occasioned by the President's visit became even more clear when such tame proceedings followed the university's enormous efforts to prepare for the event. (See related story on page 8.) For their part, members of the Secret Service and the President's Advance Team had canvassed the campus days before he arrived, providing some amusement to those who observed earphoned agents in surreptitious conversation with their cuff links; not surprisingly, many wondered why all these people, who mostly seemed engaged in the highly sensitive business of standing around, were necessary.

Still, the behavior of the Secret Service agents was helpful to at least one student, Christian Hartleben '92, an art major who devoted his spring-term independent work to a photographic study of the T-men. Observing the agents over four days, Hartleben developed an elaborate portrait of their activity, ranging from daily meetings at 4 p.m. in a Wilson School bowl to wanderings on the roof of Robertson Hall. He sums up his findings in one word: waiting. "It was a lot like Beckett, really," Hartleben says. "Granted, Godot shows up, but still . . ."

Many others, however, found the security arrangements unamusing. Sections of both Washington Road and Prospect Avenue were closed to vehicular traffic, causing morning-rush-hour jams, and while Bush was speaking, parts of Prospect were closed to even pedestrians. Security precautions also led to the closing of several buildings: no one was permitted to enter Robertson, Corwin, or Fisher/Bendheim halls for the twelve hours before Bush arrived (politics and economics majors didn't seem to mind), and hallways in the southern section of the Frick Chemical Laboratory were barricaded, denying access to several labs and frustrating attendees at a symposium (planned months before Bush was invited) in honor of Donald S. McClure, the distinguished spectroscopy expert.

But the greatest indication of just how strongly the spirit of P. T. Barnum lives on came as Bush and his entourage left. After the weeks of elaborate planning, preparation, and precautions, every visitor—from the President's party to the Secret Service agents to the national press corps—vanished almost instantly, leaving behind the feeling that the whole hullabaloo had been a bit silly. Jokes circulated about the value of a doctorate of laws from a university that has no law school. For some, Bush's most tangible legacy seems to have been not a new world order, but a new parking order. Members of Dial-Elm-Cannon Club had to move their cars from Dial Lodge's lot, which abuts the social-science complex, and the displaced drivers were at something of a loss in parking-poor Princeton. Thanks to a cooperative proctor, Steven Kaiser '92 found a spot in Lot 23, and "when I drove my car back the next day," he says, "the whole lot was totally empty." He claimed a much better space.

—Larry Zygmunt '92

IT WAS A TYPICAL STRING OF DAYS IN THE public life of Cornel R. West '80, a professor of religion at Princeton, the director of the Afro-American studies program, and a scholar and activist frequently described as the foremost African-American intellectual of his generation. On a recent Monday evening at the New School for Social Research, he took part in a panel discussion on African-American scholarship with Arnold Rampersad, an English professor at Princeton; Len Jeffries, of the City College of New York; and the New School's Clayton Riley. The following morning, he participated in a conference at Queens College entitled "Religious Leaders and the Liberation Struggle" with Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, the chancellor of Bar-Ilan University, and Jewish Week columnist Rabbi Marc Scheier. On both occasions, West engaged in the kind of spirited public debate that is central to the way he sees himself: as an intellectual freedom-fighter in the black Christian tradition.

At the New School, in a room dominated by followers of the charismatic black-neonationalist Jeffries, the nonnationalist West courageously aired his "deep disagreements" with Jeffries's culturally nationalist perspective; in passing, he also railed against the "retrograde" sexual politics of African-American cultural superstars like filmmaker Spike Lee and rap musician Chuck D. By contrast, his appearance with Jewish scholars at Queens College stemmed from his longstanding commitment to fostering a dialogue between African-Americans and Jews, a commitment evidenced by his frequent contributions to the Jewish journal Tikkun.

But these topics provide only a hint of the breadth of West's concerns. As Bill Moyers noted when he introduced West on his recent public-television series World of Ideas, "Cornel West moves in many worlds. He writes about everything from postmodern architecture and rap music to teenage suicide and black politics." The widely divergent journals in which his articles have appeared suggest his range: ArtForum, Christianity and Crisis, Le Monde Diplomatique, The Yale Law Journal, The Village Voice, and Z, just to name a few. "The thing that amazes me so much about Cornel is his breadth," says Professor Albert J. Raboteau, currently the chairman of Princeton's religion department. "There's hardly a book that you can mention that he has not only read, but read with critical acumen and insight. He has an amazing breadth and range of interests and expertise."

To observe West in action is to observe a scholar to whom abstractions and ideas are living, breathing, palpable things. A recent lecture to Princeton undergraduates titled "The Quest for Black Leadership" provided a case in point. For that lecture, part of a course on African-American thought that West taught last year, the bearded and bespectacled West wore his trademark black jacket, vest, and tie—reminiscent of the dress of the Baptist preachers he says were his greatest inspirations. West's subject at the moment was Marcus Garvey, perhaps the progenitor of American black-nationalist movements.

"Who in the hell was Marcus Garvey?" asks West of his class. "And how did he do it? He came over from Jamaica, and four years later he had created the largest movement of blacks ever. How did he do it?" West demands. As a Jamaican, Garvey had a more vivid sense than other African-Americans of what it meant to be part of a worldwide colonial network, West argues. To take his students back to the time in which Garvey lived, West then leans over the podium and begins a sotto-voce imitation of Garvey lecturing crowds on 125th Street in Harlem. Listening to West recite Garvey's words in street cadence—"America has made being black a crime, and I intend to make it a virtue!—one can easily visualize Garvey parading through the streets of Harlem, a chief executive officer leading disciplined rows of foot soldiers. The foot soldiers pull long wooden boats with ropes behind them, symbolizing their determination to return to Africa.

Aside from the quality of West's scholarship and teaching, his activism is what distinguishes him. It's an activism that suffuses his every written and spoken word. As the cultural critic and Harvard professor Henry Louis Gates, Jr., once observed, "What makes West so indispensable isn't mere intellectual agility. It is his absolute engagement with the real world. Morally, intellectually, he lives in the streets, in the storefront churches, in the shantytowns of South Africa, on corners in Harlem, wherever what 'goes down' goes down."

But it isn't mere textbook scholarship that informs West's calling. He is one scholar who "walks it as he talks it," combining scholarship with political engagement. Throughout his academic career, West has never been loath to mix it up in a world that is decidedly less orderly than the life of the mind. When he was an undergraduate at Harvard, he worked in breakfast programs organized by the Black Panther Party in Jamaica Plains, a neighborhood of Boston, and in the prison program at Norfolk State Prison, southwest of Boston. In 1987, he was one of three professors at Yale arrested (along with more than a hundred students) during protests against that university's policy of investing in corporations that did business in South Africa. In 1984, he played a fundamental role in a strike by clerical workers at Yale, where, as he puts it, "a secretary down the hall had put in twenty-eight years and was making $13,000 a year. I just can't understand that. I would do the same thing at Princeton if it happened here."

Paralleling his life in the academy (at Union Theological Seminary, Yale, and, since 1988, Princeton), West has taught in prisons, churches, and other nonacademic institutions. For example, when West was teaching religion at Union Theological Seminary, he, Stanley Aronowitz (a professor at City College), and other left-wing intellectuals helped found the Center for Workers Education in Manhattan. The center was a kind of grassroots school for trade unionists, most of whom were African-American women. Similarly, he taught at the Reverend Herbert Daughtry's Timbuktu Center at the House of the Lord Pentecostal Church, in Brooklyn. Daughtry, a controversial activist in New York, says West was "well received because of his excellent ability to translate difficult concepts into the language of everyday people." Those lectures, in which West talked about uniting the best features of Christian and Marxist thought, gave him the material for his first book, Prophecy Deliverance! And since the death in 1989 of Michael Harrington, leader of the Democratic Socialists of America, West has been one of the five honorary spokespeople of the organization, which is probably the largest left-wing association in the country. (Feminist Gloria Steinem and unionist William W. Winpisinger are two of the others.)

Through his connections with churches and as a spokesman for the Democratic Socialists, West is in great demand as a speaker and lay preacher throughout the country. He has also in recent years found time to visit London as a research fellow under the auspices of the British Film Institute and to participate in discussions of postmodern architecture organized in Chicago by a prominent postmodern architect. In the infrequent spare moments of his busy schedule, West writes: some five new books of his (either written, coauthored, or edited) are at various stages of production.

WEST AS AN INTELLECTUAL IS DIFFICULT TO PIGEONHOLE. To begin with, he is heir to the tradition of major African-American intellectuals, including W.E.B. Du Bois, C.L.R. James, and Amiri Baraka, who are part of the socialist tradition and are critics of American capitalist civilization. At the same time, he is one in a long line of black Baptist intellectuals, including Benjamin Mays and Martin Luther King, Jr., to whom social change was an integral part of their calling. Still another element in West's intellectual lineage is his connection to the American pragmatists, a philosophical tradition that began with Ralph Waldo Emerson and John Dewey and continues with Richard Rorty. This tradition has stripped philosophy of its transcendental preoccupations and deployed thought as a weapon to bring about more effective action.

Martha Minow, writing about West in a recent article in the left-wing journal Reconstruction, sees him as a scholar who "affirms beliefs and visions—from a left perspective—in an age of corrosive skepticism." In his first three books, Prophecy Deliverance!, Prophetic Fragments, and The American Evasion of Philosophy: A Genealogy of Pragmatism, West speaks especially to the sense of skepticism and attendant paralysis that, as he sees it, has undermined informed intellectual and political activism. In the current age, Minow writes, "religious systems, assumptions about human nature, and even faith in science have fallen victim to skeptical academics. . . . Over time, modernist theorists [have] undermined the one thing intellectuals had to offer politics: confidence in knowledge."

In each of his books, West tells how Americans have used conceptual tools in the service of social change. By so doing, Minow writes, "West thus responds directly to the two major problems facing contemporary left-wing intellectuals: their seeming irrelevance to politics and their gnawing sense of uncertainty about authority for belief."

In his first book, Prophecy Deliverance! (1982), West proposes an "Afro-American Revolutionary Christian" perspective that combines, in his view, the best features of Christianity and Marxism: the Christian view that every person, regardless of sex, race, or class, should have the opportunity to fulfill his or her potential, and the Marxist view that subscribes to the steadfast hope of earthly paradise. In many ways a precursor of his most ambitious work, The American Evasion of Philosophy, Prophecy Deliverance! uses Christian thought and the American pragmatic tradition as tools for "self-understanding of the Afro-American experience which suggests guidelines for action in the present."

The American Evasion of Philosophy, published in 1989, takes up where Prophecy Deliverance! leaves off, but in a much more cerebral and less race-specific way. A major revisionist account of American philosophy, American Evasion is in many respects a response to Richard Rorty's seminal work Philosophy and the Mirror of Nature (1979), which helped resurrect pragmatism in North American philosophy. But where Rorty advocates a kind of neopragmatism that completes its work after stripping philosophy of its epistemological pretensions, West talks of a "prophetic pragmatism" that begins its task after being denuded of pretensions and then journeys through the tricky terrain of cultural criticism and political engagement.

In the book, West selects for study a group of intellectuals whose work responded to the social, cultural, and political issues of their times. Among these are Emerson, Dewey, Du Bois, C. Wright Mills, and Sidney Hook. Each of these intellectuals combined philosophical pragmatism and progressive engagement in their struggles to express their conceptions of injustice. Like William James, Reinhold Niebuhr, and to some extent Du Bois, West holds a religious conception of pragmatism: "prophetic in that it harks back to the Jewish and Christian traditions of prophets who brought urgent and passionate critique to bear on the evils of their day."

West's Prophetic Fragments (1988) is perhaps his most accessible book. An anthology of articles published in popular magazines, speeches given at public rallies, sermons, and other "fragments," the book covers a range of subjects, including black neoconservatism, black-Jewish relations, and Blaise Pascal. In an article called "Violence in America," West underscores the quadrupling of the suicide rate among eighteen- to thirty-year-old blacks and the doubling of the black prison population since the 1960s. In another essay, he tells how rap music "Africanizes Afro-American popular music—accentuating syncopated polyrhythms, kinetic orality, and sensual energy in a refined form of raw expressiveness." Other chapters find West discoursing on the crisis in theological education, Martin Luther, and Marvin Gaye.

IN A PREPARED AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL STATEMENT, WEST pays homage to a long line of scholars who helped shape him as an intellectual. Equally important to his development were his mother, a first-grade teacher and the first black principal of an elementary school in Sacramento, California, and his father, a career civil servant in the federal government. The elder Wests raised their children in the Baptist Church. According to their older son, Clifton, who still lives in Sacramento, "religion has always been a part of all of our lives. Our parents instilled in us a sense of morality and underscored the importance of spirituality as a way of coping with the things of life." Cornel adds, "The Christian sense of the love ethic, the notion of the universal scope of loving, caring, giving, sacrificing, and risking, were values our parents preached daily and which left an indelible imprint upon my sense of self."

According to Clifton, Cornel as a child was a precocious intellectual whose love of the life of the mind was balanced by a love of sports. Both brothers were track stars in high school—Clifton in the mile and Cornel in the two-mile. Clifton went on to Berkeley, where he set a school record in his event. But when Cornel matriculated at Harvard, he resisted the track coach's overtures in order to concentrate on his studies. Although separated by a continent, the brothers remain close, and each named his son after the other.

Clifton also recalls his kid brother's tendency to get into fights. "He had been a leader in his class—not a bully, but a kind of Robin Hood. He'd read a book a day and go out and play sports. But Cornel had a temper, and a deep sense of fairness. There was a time when he would get into a fight every day."

According to Clifton, a pivotal incident in Cornel's life occurred when he was in the third grade. Apparently influenced by the civil-rights movement, Cornel refused to salute the flag one morning, struck a teacher who didn't appreciate his attitude, and got kicked out of school. Subsequently, he was tested, found to be intellectually gifted, and transferred to a special school for gifted youth. A teacher there recognized his potential and took him under her wing. "He learned how to channel his anger and sense of injustice," Clifton says.

Cornel West concurs with his brother's assessment. "There's no doubt I was headed for jail," he says. "In fact, a lot of people in the old neighborhood still think I'm in jail. It was a deep transformation that had something to do with the new school, something to do with the teacher, and something to do with my Christian faith. I had been baptized and began to take my faith more seriously. I found a way to channel my rage at the absurdity of being black in America."

Whatever the reason for his transformation, West got on an academic track and never looked back. At Harvard, he majored in Near Eastern languages and literature ("I wanted to learn how to read the Old Testament in the original language," he explains), and graduated magna cum laude in 1973 after only three years. He then asked W.V.O. Quine, a philosophy professor at Harvard, where he would go to graduate school if he were twenty years of age. Following Quine's advice, West applied to Princeton.

In describing West as a student, his professors at both Harvard and Princeton echo Clifton West's words. "Cornel didn't have a strong ambition to be an intellectual, an academic, or an activist," he says. "It was never important for him to have a lot of money. He was just eager to feed his thirst for knowledge." Preston Williams, a professor at Harvard Divinity School, says West "was always an intellectual. He reached out to take as many courses as he possibly could, was cognizant that he had a distinctive contribution to make, and sought constantly to inform himself about his world." Paul Benacerraf '52 '60, a philosophy professor who is serving his final month as Princeton's provost, remembers West as an "omnivorous" student who "would read everything." The only thing Benacerraf recalls wondering was if West would one day move beyond the receptivity stage and mature into a creative, productive scholar. Benacerraf says that West has evolved in this way—but still retains his tremendous appetite for knowledge.

A recent stroll with West through Princeton's University Store provided a glimpse of his "omnivorous" appetite at work. Getting him out of the section of academic journals proved to be a major undertaking. After prolonged browsing, he gobbled up five to seven journals and a handful of other books and took them to the cashier. Earlier, he had told me that his reading list that season included Robert Gilpin and Richard Falk on international relations (both are Woodrow Wilson School professors); the Victorian writer John Morley's book on Edmund Burke; the early novels of John Wideman; and Eric Voegelin's Autobiographical Reflections.

Between 1975, when he received his M.A. from Princeton, and 1980, when he completed his work for a Ph.D., West spent some time soul-searching. He wrote a novel and some short stories and wrestled with his vocation as an intellectual. His thinking at the time is reflected in an excerpt from the unpublished novel in Prophetic Fragments. The novel, West says, is about an African-American who is losing his hearing, "who could no longer hear the music that sustained him, and who therefore had to recast the music with his pen . . . The question becomes how you can transpose the richness of black American music to what I think is still an underdeveloped tradition, the black intellectual tradition."

At the same time, he perceived that academic life had its shortcomings: "I was intent on remaining in the academy while remaining quite cognizant of the limits of the academy and the ways we academics always confuse the universe with the university. I vowed to forever remain linked to the community outside, but would want to be in contact with the best and most sophisticated conversation going on in the academy."

His links to the "community outside" were nourished by his first two major academic appointments, at Union Theological Seminary and Yale Divinity School. These religious and academic institutions, West says, are to some extent "on the edges of the academy. The seminary gives you a direct link to the churches, ecclesiastical agencies that are more linked to the realities of people. My coming to Princeton put me more at the center of mainstream academic life than at any other time in my career."

West applied to be the director of Princeton's Afro-American studies program at the suggestion of Ruth Simmons, a former associate dean of the faculty who is now the provost of Spelman College, in Atlanta. What attracted him to the position, he says, was the presence of humanities professor Toni Morrison, who he believes is "one of the great figures in American letters . . . I would probably be at Union Seminary today if Toni were not at Princeton." A few months after he arrived Princeton, West told The Princeton Sentinel newspaper that his goal was "to contribute to the larger intellectual conversation in the university, to reshape it, redefine it, reconceptualize it in such a way that it's very difficult to understand the modern world without talking about race and empires, very difficult to understand the American experience without talking about the plight, predicament, as well as resistances and the contributions of people of color."

Within a year of his return to Princeton, West was already being pursued by Harvard, which was attempting to rebuild its Afro-American studies department by raiding "stars" from other institutions. After considerable thought, West decided to stay at Princeton. Benacerraf declines to discuss any special incentives Princeton may have offered West to stay, but says that the university's decision to establish a postdoctoral program in black studies, and offer fellowships in that program, may have been a factor in West's choice. West simply says that he decided to stay because of his appreciation for Princeton's community of scholars. "Princeton for me is a such a good community of intellectuals, like Jeffrey Stout [76], Toni Morrison, Al Raboteau, and others. You can't beat that combination. I didn't think I'd find it at Harvard."

Administrators like Benacerraf are aware of how important West is—along with scholars like Morrison, Raboteau, and historian Nell Painter—to drawing students to the Afro-American studies program and bolstering Princeton's strength in this critical and competitive area of scholarship. They are hopeful that the program will grow with West, who at age thirty-eight is still a very young scholar. Cornel West, says Benacerraf, "is an exceptional person with extraordinary sensibilities as well as great intellectual power. I have no reason to think that he's stopped growing and no sense at all of where he will end up. I simply see no bounds."

Angelo John Lewis is a writer in the university's office of development communications.

After a rally for an "alternative agenda" on the day President Bush came to town, Cornel West stopped to speak to fellow professors and students.

AMERICAN STEEL: HOT METAL MEN AND THE RESURRECTION OF THE RUST BELT

Richard Preston '83 • Prentice Hall Press, $19.95

ONCE UPON A TIME, the American steel industry was the envy of the industrial world. Its mills were massive, its machinery state of the art, its workers prodigiously productive. But something went wrong during the 1960s and 1970s. Management stopped investing in new equipment, labor costs skyrocketed, and ultra-efficient high-tech mills came on line in Japan, West Germany, and South Korea, producing steel at prices the Americans could not match. The results were devastating: scores of obsolete American plants closed forever, hundreds of thousands of workers lost their jobs, and by the end of the 1980s, the U.S. share of the world steel market had shriveled to a paltry 11 percent.

As the 1990s begin, American steel is still down, but not out, as the reader finds out in this fascinating account of one company's attempt to turn the tables on the foreigners and become the global leader in the manufacture of steel. The company is the upstart Nucor Corporation, and its bid for steel-making supremacy is based on a radical new technology—the Compact Strip Production facility, the world's first continuous hot-band steel-casting machine. If Nucor can make this untested technology work, it will be able to produce sheet steel five times more efficiently than its closest competitor, and will vault overnight to the forefront of the world steel industry.

Richard Preston tells the story of Nucor's many struggles—to construct a new mill in a farm field outside the town of Crawfordsville, Indiana, to assemble and install the revolutionary strip-casting machine, and to coax the cantankerous beast into running—with great zest and flair.

He also details the corporation's curious history—it began life in 1904 as the Reo

Motor Car Company—and deftly profiles the colorful personalities behind the Crawfordsville Project: Ken Iverson, Nucor's hard-charging C.E.O.; Manfred Kolakowski, the German inventor of the Compact Strip Production machine; and Keith Busse, plant-builder extraordinaire.

But he is at his best when he is writing about steel and the "hot metal men" who make it. In prose that sparks and crackles like scrap iron melting in a blast furnace, he takes the reader on an unforgettable journey into an alien world, an incredibly dangerous, bizarrely beautiful place, where the "fiercest, largest, and heaviest manufacturing engines on the planet" are used to turn cauldrons of liquid fire into gleaming ribbons of cold, hard steel.

Eloquent, engrossing, and entertaining, American Steel is first-rate nonfiction by a gifted writer.

Lincoln's Barnyard Metaphors

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND THE SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION

James M. McPherson • Oxford University Press, $17.95

IN 1862, frustrated with General George B. McClellan's endless requests for more troops, Abraham Lincoln observed that sending reinforcements to McClellan was like shoveling flies across a barnyard—most of them never seemed to get there. And a year later, when "Fightin' Joe" Hooker boasted that God should have mercy on Robert E. Lee, because he would have none, Lincoln commented that "the hen is the wisest of all the animal creation because she never cackles until the egg is laid."

Lincoln's reliance on such rustic metaphors has passed into legend along with his log-cabin, rail-splitting image. But some of his contemporaries, especially sophisticated Easterners, thought such language inappropriate. The high-flown rhetoric of the day—the style favored by Jefferson Davis, among others, North and South—was considered more fitting for a statesman.

In this slim and brilliant collection of essays, James M. McPherson convincingly demonstrates the fallacies inherent in this—and many other—commonly held views of Lincoln. McPherson, the Edwards Professor of American History, a recipient this spring of Princeton's Howard T. Behrman Award for distinguished achievement in the humanities, and winner of the Pulitzer Prize for his Civil War history Battle Cry of Freedom (1988), argues that Lincoln's skill with metaphors was an essential element of his presidential leadership.

In an essay titled "How Lincoln Won the War with Metaphors," McPherson asserts that it was Lincoln's particular genius to phrase issues of state in ways that common people could grasp. Whether using allegory, parable, fable, or metaphor, Lincoln was a Great Communicator 125 years before another president gained that label.

Some of Lincoln's metaphors have permanently entered our political lexicon—for example, "a house divided against itself cannot stand," which actually comes from the New Testament—but McPherson makes the reader appreciate Lincoln's command of language in cases that are less well known but no less subtle and compelling. Indeed, one of the best sections of "How Lincoln Won the War with Metaphors" describes the masterful interweaving of themes in the Gettysburg Address. That McPherson can infuse new life into one of the best-known speeches of all time testifies to his skill and his own command of language.

Of course, there's plenty of food for thought elsewhere in Abraham Lincoln and the Second American Revolution. In "The Hedgehog and the Foxes," McPherson uses a metaphor of his own to describe how Lincoln's tenacious adherence to one principle—Union—served him better than the vacillating policies of men like Secretary of State William Seward and New York Tribune editor Horace Greeley, who were more clever and better educated than he. The title essay dissects the longstanding historical debate about whether Lincoln was a revolutionary bent on overthrowing the old political order or a conservative trying to preserve it. McPherson concludes that Lincoln was a "conservative revolutionary"—not an ideological revolutionary, but "a pragmatic revolutionary who found it necessary to destroy slavery and create a new birth of freedom in order to preserve the Union."

Former students of McPherson's will find many themes from his popular undergraduate course on the Civil War reflected in these essays. So, too, will readers of his two comprehensive narrative histories of the war (Ordeal by Fire, published in 1982, is the other). But the essay form releases McPherson from the constraints of narrative. He can draw from a wide variety of sources, critique the work of other historians, and examine the broad issues of the war outside a narrow chronological framework. And he achieves these goals in a typically elegant, pithy style.

One caveat: these essays aren't for readers who want detailed descriptions of military campaigns. They appeal instead to anyone interested in understanding the underlying issues of the Second American Revolution. That should include us all.

Dominant Women's Crew Upset at Easterns; Men's Crews Row to Mixed Results

The powerful women's crew, riding high with an undefeated record, suffered an unexpected loss to Boston University.

AFTER ONE HAS enjoyed the fruits of perfection, anything less tastes bitter. Members of the women's varsity crew can attest to that. The top Tiger boat began the season with five seniors from an exceptional crew that was undefeated last year, won the Eastern Association of Women's Rowing Colleges championship, and rowed off with the national championship in Madison, Wisconsin.

This year's octet had hoped for nothing less than a second consecutive Eastern Sprints title. Heading into the Sprints, held May 19 on Lake Waramaug in New Preston, Connecticut, the rowers had pulled their way to another undefeated record (10-0; 7-0 Ivy) and had won twenty-one races in a row. But in the 2,000-meter "Grand Race" of the day, they ran second behind a powerful crew from Boston University.

In spite of this major upset, the Princeton women captured the overall team championship at the Easterns on the strength of the varsity's performance, a phenomenal blowout by the open-water first novice, and three top-three finishes on the junior-varsity and second-novice levels. The Tigers beat out Radcliffe for the team title—their first Willing Trophy since 1986, when they shared the honors with Yale.

Eastern Sprints is collegiate rowing's equivalent of Wimbledon: to conquer the eighteen-team Eastern field is to be the major force in the sport. The crew practices daily throughout the academic year, rowing through countless sunrises and sunsets, with an Eastern title as the goal. Now the team will have to look toward the national championships, in Cincinnati in June, for redemption.

"Historically, the team that wins at Easterns is usually the best team in the nation," says Dan Roock '81, in his first year as the head coach of women's crew. "The structure and level of competition at Easterns is greater than at Nationals."

Throughout the varsity's season, which began in March with a trouncing of Mount Holyoke on a rainy Lake Carnegie, it would have been difficult to imagine a superior boat. The varsity rowed away with victory after victory. The boat's only gut-wrenching race was a two-and-a-half-second tug past Radcliffe on April 13. The Tigers glided to wins over Yale and Brown, traditionally formidable rivals, by margins of eleven and thirteen seconds, respectively.

But Boston University, which Princeton does not face in the regular season, was never far from the minds of the rowers or their coach. Like Princeton, the B.U. crew had enjoyed an undefeated spring and a close victory over Radcliffe.

"We've been very nervous and jittery all season," says Melissa Holcombe '91. "We felt incredible pressure because we were no longer underdogs, and everyone was looking at us as the team to beat this year. We knew that both B.U.

and Radcliffe were the teams that we would have to beat."

Princeton was "the team to beat" largely because of its outstanding contingent of seniors. Bonnie Hagerman, co-captain Simone Pulver, Katie Young, Laura Matlack, and Holcombe have been rowing together for four years. As freshmen, the five formed the heart of a crew that won the Eastern novice title. They went on to row for three years in the first varsity boat. In those four years, the quintet won two Eastern titles and a national championship, and never lost a race on Lake Carnegie. The five have suffered losses to only three schools: Yale at the 1988 Nationals, Radcliffe at the 1989 Nationals and Easterns, and B.U. at this year's Easterns.

Curtis Jordan, the former women's coach and current men's heavyweight coach, has said that from the first intrasquad race in their novice campaign, everyone knew that these rowers were exceptional. In that race, they handily defeated an experienced squad of varsity rowers.

Exceptional indeed.

Last summer, Young, who has rowed since eighth grade, was part of the United States national eight-rower boat, which won a silver medal at the world championships. This summer in Indianapolis, Holcombe and Hagerman will likely attend the training and tryout camp for the U.S. national team, while Matlack is pulling to make the national team in the two-oar sculling event. Pulver's Swiss citizenship is the only barrier to her joining her teammates in the national ranks of U.S. rowing.

Although they may not receive the attention that their senior hullmates do, the other members of the varsity boat have been just as integral to the boat's success in this ultimate of team sports. Rounding out the boat are Sophie Glenn '92, Fay Hanley '93, and Laura Dalston '93.

It would be inaccurate to say that the senior rowers will not be missed next year, but the waves created by this year's novice crew will make the seniors' departure much easier to bear. In addition to winning the novice event at the Easterns by a five-second margin, the rookie rowers broke, by a full second, Lake Waramaug's course record for novices.

Several of these novice rowers, as well as those returning from the junior-varsity boats, will compete next year to fill the void left by the graduating seniors.

Among the men's crews, this season presented mixed results. The traditionally strong lightweight crew ended its regular-season campaign with what the rowers considered a disappointing finish at the Eastern Sprints, held May 11-12 in Worcester, Massachusetts. Although the lightweights captured second place (behind Harvard), they, like the women, had hoped for more. The squad enjoyed a successful season, its only losses coming at the Harvard-Yale-Princeton race. At the Easterns, the lightweights took second-place honors overall behind Harvard, based on the performances of the varsity, junior-varsity, and first-novice boats.

The young heavyweight crew finished fourth in the overall standings at the Easterns.

terns. The heavies, who will retain most of their rowers next fall, had regarded 1990-91 as a rebuilding season under their new coach, and were therefore pleased to take fourth in a strong field.

The story around the Boathouse is that when John Glenn splashed down after his historic flight in space, a reporter asked him if being the first American to orbit planet Earth was the greatest experience of his life.

"It was an experience second only to winning Eastern Sprints," he is said to have replied.

In 1991, the only Princeton rowers who savored that experience were the seven freshmen and two sophomores aboard the women's first-novice boat. With that victory, they also tasted the desire for many more flights just like it.

Armond Hill Returns to Jadwin, And Other Coaching Changes

ONE OF THE REASONS the men's basketball team ran away with the Ivy title this year was the anemic opposition thrown up by the rest of the league. Purists may proclaim that, unlike other leagues, Ivy sports are intended to build athletes' characters, not fill seats, but it's much easier to take this attitude when your team is winning. So it came as no surprise that, soon after the season ended, several schools in the Ancient Eight fired their coaches.

With all these positions opening up around the league, it was only a matter of time before Pete Carril would lose one of his fine assistant coaches to hardwood new. On May 6, Jan van Breda Kolff, a former N.B.A. star and the son of Willem '45, Princeton's coach in the Bradley era, accepted the head coaching job at Cornell. When asked about V.B.K.'s replacement, Carril said he was looking for an Ivy League graduate—preferably an alumnus of Princeton—who was "a good player." Well, he got what he asked for.

Nine days later, Director of Athletics Bob Myslik '61 announced that Armond Hill '85 would be the new assistant coach. He and Bill Carmody will assist Carril when the Tigers return next fall to defend their title for a third straight time. Hill, originally a member of the Class of '76, helped lead the Tigers to the N.I.T. championship in 1975 and an N.C.A.A. appearance in 1976, the last year in which Princeton was undefeated in Ivy play before the 1990-91 campaign. At the end of the 1975-76 season, he was unanimously chosen the Ivy League Player of the Year, and then opted to play in the N.B.A.

"Smooth," as he was nicknamed, played nearly six of his eight years in the pros for the Atlanta Hawks, where he built on his collegiate strength as a team leader from the backcourt. He was a tenacious defender and often led his team to victory with assists. After his professional career was over, Hill returned to the university to complete his degree, in psychology, and then became a basketball coach and art curator at the Lawrenceville School, his prep-school alma mater just down the road from Princeton.

In the wake of Hill's appointment, speculation immediately turned to when Carril might retire and whether the thirty-eight-year-old Hill was being groomed as his successor. Carril will begin his twenty-fifth year as a head coach this fall, and there have been rumors that he would retire after each of the Tigers' three championship seasons since 1989. But with the talented players he keeps recruiting—including a 6'8" center from suburban Chicago who is said to be even better than Kit Mueller '91 was in high school—it's no wonder that Carril wants to stick around.

Myslik also has reported three other major coaching changes in the last few months. In April, he announced that Fred Samara, for years the coach of men's field events, would replace Larry Ellis as the head coach of men's track. Ellis, who remains the men's cross-country coach, will thus be able to devote more time to the Track Athletic Congress, of which he is the executive vice-president. The team of Ellis and Samara has brought much success to Princeton, which has won four indoor and seven outdoor Heptagonal League titles since 1980. Samara, who was recently named a coach of the 1992 Olympic track team, has coached six all-Americans at Princeton. Ellis coached the 1984 Olympic team to twenty-four medals, one of the best showings ever.

Also in April, Myslik announced the resignation of April Heinrichs, the vaunted coach of the women's soccer team, to accept the same job at the University of Maryland. Heinrichs, who plays on the women's national team, was named the Collegiate Player of the Decade for the 1980s by Soccer America magazine last year. Her surprise departure, after coaching at Princeton for just a year, was a big disappointment to her players and to a program that appears to be on an upswing. Some of the players said Heinrichs wanted to return to the Atlantic Coast Conference, where she had starred as an undergraduate at the Myslik capped his string of coaching announcements by reporting, in May, that Emily Goodfellow '76 had been appointed to replace Betty Constable w'36 as the coach of women's squash. Constable, one of Princeton's most successful coaches ever, retired this spring after her team won the Howe Cup for the twelfth time in her twenty-year career (PAW, March 20). Goodfellow is the only athlete in Princeton history to earn twelve varsity letters—four each in lacrosse, squash, and field hockey—and since she received her B.A. in religion, she has worked as an assistant coach at Princeton, a sportswriter at ABC, and a graphics designer.

A Car So Refined, It S And Lets You Out

Steps Aside First.

Desperair not. In this age of rough manners and boorish behavior, you can still find a haven of grace and sophistication: the cabin of the LS400 luxury sedan.

Everything found within has been designed not only to meet your needs but to anticipate them.

For example, when you are ready to leave the cabin, the car will neatly execute a point of etiquette: automatically (if you choose) the steering wheel column will raise itself up and out of your way as soon as you remove the key.

But what goes up must come down. When you enter the cabin, the column will lower itself into your hands to its precise pre-set position the moment you insert the key.

Of course, all this discussion about entering and leaving should not distract you from the subject of driving. Only that experience is hard to capture on paper. To try to somehow tabulate the serenity and quiet of the well-appointed cabin will not do the LS400 justice.

So for a test drive, see your dealer. He will answer your questions, wait patiently for your comments, show you every courtesy.

See? Chivalry is not dead.

L'il Arthur regrets that there aren't more classmates available to realize that E. V. Gordy, the oldest living member of 1912, who will be 102 this coming July, is a unique correspondent. His last letter came in a cassette on tape and contained a song composed by Eef, himself.

It seems to be largely the state of his feet and legs, plus the distance of Spartanburg from Princeton, that prevents him from winning from L'il Arthur the distinction of being the oldest classmate attending a reunion at Princeton.

A recent letter from Mrs. Priscilla Penfield Chester, address given above, daughter of Dr. Wilder Penfield and wife of George M. Chester '44, tells of the honor accorded her father on Mar. 15, 1991, when the Canadian Post Corp. issued a commemorative stamp with her father's portrait on it in his honor. Three other doctors were honored in a like manner. She, her sister, and two nieces attended the ceremony, in the Osler library of the History of Medicine, McGill Univ., Montreal. It was the official introduction of the stamp. The article she sent contains a picture of her niece, Kate Lewis, holding a picture of the commemorative stamp.

Rosemont, PA 19010

Thank-you letters are frequently received from undergraduates who have received Class of 1914 scholarships which have enabled them to attend Princeton as their favorite college for the education they hoped to receive. One letter received from Paul J. Lim '92 is especially interesting. I would like to share the following excerpt:

"I would like to thank you and the Class of 1914 for being awarded the Alfred Baker Scholarship, created in memory of Hobart Amory Hare Baker. I am currently a junior at Princeton, majoring in politics. I serve as the editor-in-chief of the DAILY PRINCETONIAN, on whose sports pages Hobey Baker is fondly remembered. Because of my work on the Prince, I am seriously considering going into journalism or media studies.

I am originally from Reseda, Calif., which is just a bit north of Los Angeles. My parents had always wanted to send my brother, my sister, and me to the East Coast to get the best education possible. But my family could never have afforded to have sent us here without the help of Princetonians like your Class members and yourself. For that I am grateful to you and the rest of the wonderful alumni of Old Nassau. Though my father died when I was 12 years old, I know he would have been proud that I became a Princetonian, as did my brother, John, who will be graduating this year in the Class of 1991.

I knew from a very young age that I wanted to go to Princeton, which has given me an education and personal experience that Harvard and Yale could never have offered. My sister also came to the East Coast before us and graduated from Smith College.

Hobey Baker's legend still lives on at Princeton. From his days as an all-American halfback, to his reputation as one of the finest hockey players that this country ever saw, Hobey Baker has set a mark of excellence to which today's Princetonians still aspire. For this reason I am especially grateful for the scholarship which bears his name. Thank you and your Class for the help. Without it I never would have experienced Princeton, which I have fallen in love with."

The Apr. 5 Annual Giving progress report shows '17 second only to '20 in Class roll participation rate and first in average alumnus gift for post-50th classes. Heartiest congratulations to our Class Agent, Doug Nichols, for attaining these excellent results.

The Class will be glad to know that Don Platten '40, our honorary member and son of our late classmate, Homer Platten, is recovering nicely from recent surgery.

Herewith excerpts from 1917 scholarship recipients: Daphne Nizza, of the Class of 1993 and a recipient of the Harvey Lawrence Cory War Memorial Scholarship, is a pre-med student; however, she plans to major in history and strive for a certificate in the European Cultural Studies Program. Next year she will live in Rockefeller College and serve as a resident adviser to a group of freshmen. She writes, "to express my utmost gratitude, since, were it not for scholarships like yours, I certainly would not have been able to attend Princeton. Thank you! I assure you, I am doing my best to reap all of the rich opportunities available at Princeton." Courtney Intersimone, a junior and a recipient of the Marquand Ward War Memorial Scholarship, plans to pursue a career in clinical psychology. He is the son of Richard Intersimone '64. He closes his letter of appreciation by saying, "My father always said to me that the relationship you have with Princeton does not end on the day you graduate, but continues throughout your life. I feel extremely lucky to be here and I know that I will always treasure my four years here. I hope that someday I will be able to make it possible for someone else to be a student here. Thank you for making that possible for me."

Laura Coonrod is a junior and a recipient of the Arthur Vandervoort Savage War Memorial Scholarship. She plans a career in molecular biology and closes her letter, "Thank you for your continued support of Princeton and its students. Princeton is a wonderful place and a great opportunity; thank you for making it possible for me."

JAMES CROMWELL
Meadow Lakes, Apt. 3108
Hightstown, NJ 08520

Thanks to the Class of '21 whose column in the Apr. 17 PAW picked up on our limerick about the man from Nantucket. They added two more wonderful stanzas which tracks the purloined cash from Nantucket to Pawtucket to Manhasset. Bravo!

At Reunions time, let's digest this one:

There was a young lady of Riga
Who smiled as she rode on a tiger;
They returned from the ride
With the lady inside,
And the smile on the face of the tiger.

Our classmate John H. Burns Jr. died Apr. 13 in his hometown of Wichita, Kansas, one short hour after he suffered a stroke. John celebrated his 96th birthday Mar. 23. He is survived by his widow, Frances, and two children, Barbara Johnson and John B. Burns, both of Wichita. John was the founder of Harris, Burns & Co., general insurance. A memorial will appear.

The old wheel does go around and around, does it not? Your Class secretary's stepson, Alan Kirk '50, who is helping with this column, grew up in Morristown, N.J., where he not only was a good friend of all of the Cromwell gang but also of all the progeny of Dick and Mary Catherine Farrelly. Alan now lives in the Washington, D.C., area and sees the first-born Farrelly, Ann Locher, and also a Farrelly grandchild, Christopher Gottscho, a son of Margie Farrelly Gottscho. Chris, who seems to be about eight feet tall, is a recent graduate of the U.Va. Law School, worked as a lawyer for a few years with the Dewey, Ballantine firm, and is now in the securities business. He plays a fierce game of power tennis and enjoys the most active social life of a handsome bachelor in the nation's capital. Alan Kirk has managed to take a wee sum from him on the golf links, but only because this young Farrelly offspring has concentrated on tennis over golf.

I have received most enthusiastic letters of appreciation and thanks from six students who have been recipients of the scholarships from our Class.

Yu-Wen Chang immigrated to this country with his family in 1983 from Taiwan. He is a member of the Class of 1992 and is majoring in electrical engineering. He is the president of the University Table Tennis Club, one of the most profitable clubs on campus. This year, Princeton took the Ivy League title for the third year. He is the recipient of the John Verplanck Newlin War Memorial Scholarship.

Guy Yalit feels the environment at Princeton is amazing. Being surrounded by people of such different views is like taking a tour of the world by walking down your hall.

Sandor Lemorzy is a member of the Class of 1994 and hopes to major in math. He is the recipient of the Lansing C. Holden Memorial Scholarship for the year 1990-91.

Vanessa Rubio is a member of the Class of 1993 and a recipient of the Eric Anderson Fowler War Memorial Scholarship. Her major is civil engineering. Chris Simpson is also a recipient of the Eric Anderson Fowler Memorial Scholarship. He is a member of the Class of 1994.

B. Kelly McDowell is a recipient of the Joseph S. Young-Lebeigh Portland Cement Co. Scholarship. He is majoring in history and is a member of the Class of 1991.

Mrs. Ellot J. Walker has moved to 223 Fairways Dr., Thomasville, GA 31792-7492.

Casey Downing has had a lot of excitement over the erroneous report of his death in the March issue and now has a new lease on life, although he still has his cane, hearing aid, glasses, etc.

Big news! Hoping at least one member of 1920 has not heard of Princeton's big news, we will report that a Princeton graduate—who has been dean of students, dean of the college, and provost at Princeton, has just been appointed the next president of Harvard. We congratulate Neil (and Angelica) Rudenstine, we wish them good luck, and wonder how they will feel at their first Harvard-Princeton game!

Strange news. A Princeton sophomore called Alexi Indris-Santana has been recognized as James Arthur Hogue, a 31-year-old man wanted by the State of Utah as a felon and a parole violator. Princeton has charged him with defrauding the University of $40,000 in tuition aid, and for forgery, falsifying records, and wrongful impersonation.

Sad news. Ed Pulling has died. He had kept his youthful looks so long he seemed the best candidate in the Class for 1920 Last Survivor.

The photograph topping this column is easily recognizable, Carol and Russell Butler. Your secretary had tea with them a week ago and they are hard put to it to get around, but are still such congenial company. Frank Dixon sent a magazine picture of himself in a wheelchair at a Lockheed Corporation talk in Norton, Calif. Unfortunately the picture won't reproduce well. Eva Tounley writes that she and daughter Sue took a Just-Us-Girls-Rest-and-Relax trip in the Caribbean on a Royal Caribbean ship that was super.

We will close with thank yous to Ryan McDonough and Domingo Monet for their warm letters of appreciation. They are two of our 1920 scholarship students.

Harry Brauner, our West Coast V.P., is still very much on the go. He reports a recent trip to Hawaii that included four generations of Brawners. He also tells us that his driver's license has been renewed until 1996. He is certainly no relation of that gentleman who won't even buy green bananas anymore.

The Class extends hearty birthday greetings to Chan Sweet, 93 on June 12; Mike Hockaday, 92 on June 14; and Chas Haines, 93 on July 5.

Chet Billings' widow, Louise, has moved from Meadow Lakes in Hightstown, N.J., to 470 Frogtown Rd. in New Canaan, CT 06840. Arnold Wood's widow, Lambie, has moved from Little Silver, N.J., to RR4, Box 238A, Belk Lake, Montrose, PA 18801.

We occasionally receive word from classmates' wives that their husbands are in nursing homes. We can only extend heartfelt sympathy to Chan Sweet and Helen.

The Coleman Hawley Williams War Memorial Scholarship was awarded to Ann Vasquez '92, who sent her thanks. Her home in Philadelphia, and she is majoring in psychology. Our best wishes for her success.

Three Class widows have died within the past six months: Chuck Carpenter's widow, Alexandra, on Nov. 5, 1990; Don Murray's widow, Mary, on Feb. 17, 1991; and Trum Perry's widow, Harriett, in 1991. The Class extends sympathy to their families.

Tom Urmy died Apr. 22, 1991. A memorial will follow.

To those who know her from Reunions or elsewhere, I must report that Margaret, my wife for 67 years, died on April 13 after a long illness.

We have a memorial in this issue.

JACK REYNOLDS, JOHN CARTIER '60
103 East 84th St.
New York, NY 10028

Our best correspondent, Francis Corcoran (wearing the hat) sent this photo taken with Art Lambert at the 60th in 1982. The Class's Assistant Secretary, John Cartier '60, and his wife will be joining the Class at Reunions at the Old Guard Luncheon and P-rade. We look forward to this wonderful occasion. We received very nice thank-you notes from Gary Shuens-Han Chan and Michael Jackman, both current recipients of the Edward T. Burke 1922 Scholarship Fund. Both students are extremely grateful for this splendid assistance and are very proud of their Princeton education.

We are very happy to receive a good flow of notes. Stu Palmer reports that he received a note from Struve Hensel who also lost his "sainted" wife. Both classmates are enjoying life in Florida and Struve hopes to attend Reunions. Coincidentally the 1959 Class Secretary Jay Siegel sent a nice note: "Stu was my Latin teacher in high school in the mid-1950s, and was the person most responsible for kindling my interest in attending Princeton. We have kept in touch—albeit infrequently—these past 35 years. My parents, who are a few years younger than Stu, vacation in Florida each year and usually manage to pay him a visit. At last report he was doing well."

A note from Mrs. Eve Currie that John is living in a nursing home in Santa Fe, N.M. He celebrated his 92nd birthday in May.

RICHARD H. HOBBS
1630 Sheridan Rd., # 1-E
Wilmette, IL 60091

We are indebted to John Jenney '25 for news about our illustrious fox hunters Bud Richardson and Jack Van Urk. Both are in excellent health and spirit. John had had dinner with Bud and enclosed a newspaper article about Jack's colorful career as a newspaperman, author, and publisher. One of his books, LITTLE CHARLIE—THE FOX is a delightful children's story. Bobbie Emeny recently visited with Virginia and Mal Haven in Charleston. Mal's present address is Apt 2-D, 109 East Bay St. Ed Naumburg writes that his chronic back trouble will prevent him from attending Reunions. Ed is a generous supporter of the Firestone Library. He has given them many valuable books and manuscripts. Fred Moble reports that Howie Sadler is recovering from his operation. Dick Morehouse writes that he and Martha are enjoying their retirement home at Overland Park, a suburb of Kansas City, Mo., where they have many friends. Clarence Coleman is well and happy. He still divides his time between Winnetka and La Quinta. His son and one of his grandsons now run his business, giving him more time for golf.

Of the 68 of us lucky enough to survive, 33 have failed to pay Class dues. Let us improve upon this record.

We regret to report that Paul W. Purmort died Jan. 1 and W. P. Fuller Brauner on Mar. 11.

Bill Johnson has sent in a privately printed book, LETTERS FROM BILL TO MAYO 1924-27 inscribed "For the Class of 1925 with best wishes to all." The introduction states: "These are more than just love letters, they reveal what college education was really like in a liberal arts college and a technical school (R.P.I.) in the 1920s." The letters include comments on curriculum, outside reading, participation in athletics (Bill was on the soccer and wrestling teams), and attendance at parties in various nearby metropolitan centers and Memphis (often accompanied by roommates George Cunningham, Ken Curran, and Ach Duncan) where a certain amount of drinking went on. Bill was taken into Phi Beta Kappa in the middle of senior year (graduating in June with honors in physics). His group was formally initiated at a dinner, an impressive gathering at the Graduate College, at which President Hibben, President Angell of Yale, Dean Fine, and Professors Conklin, Spaeth, and Root were speakers. After obtaining his master's at R.P.I. and completing the three-year advanced course in engineering at General Electric, he had a career in research and teaching, both industrial and academic.

Bill married Mayo in 1926. After obtaining her master's in art, Mayo taught at Hiram College (Oh.). She was an artist of distinction, working in bronze sculptures and ceramics. She died in 1987. Since his retirement in 1972, Bill has pursued a career in genealogical research, working in the libraries of Kent State and Western Reserve universities.

Walt Miller is recovering from a heart bypass; C. V. Wilson from a fall in his house.

We regret to report the death of Edward D'Arms Apr. 30, 1991. We have memorials in this issue.

"THE FLAGSHIP CLASS CRUISES ONWARD" was the headline in the Apr. 8 Annual Giving Bulletin of the Alumni Council, and the story went on to say "that 1926 Class Agent Lew Rumford, with his 'Special Gifts Committee,' have already bagged the first record for the 1990-91 Annual Giving campaign. Their $176,452 passes 1925's 65th-reunion mark of $172,416. '26 has now posted records in all six of their official major reunions."

The Sporting Life

WHEN SAM HOWELL '50 returned from the Korean War in 1953, he was in poor health and uncertain about his future. As he stepped off the plane and into his parents' arms, however, he had other things on his mind: instead of going straight to his home in Princeton, he had his folks drop him off at Palmer Stadium in time to see the football team get walloped by Navy, 65-7.

Howell has been attending Princeton sporting events since he was eight years old, when his father, an English professor at the university, gave him a coupon book for varsity games. Since then, he estimates, he has seen about 18,000 Princeton sporting events. For the last 11,000 or so, he has been getting paid for it, serving a twenty-year stint as the associate director of athletics. A star quarter-miler at Princeton, Howell traveled with the Princeton-Cornell teams that competed against Cambridge and Oxford in 1949 and 1950. He majored in geology, and planned to study oil geology in Texas. The Korean War intervened, however, and upon his return, his father pulled strings to get him a "temporary" job with what was then known as the student aid office. He enjoyed the work; one year became three, his duties expanded into the admission office, and by the time he met and married his wife, Joan, who was also employed at the university, he figured he was here to stay.

Ruddy and ebullient, Howell has spent much of his career troubleshooting. In 1957 he was tapped by the dean of the faculty to be the first administrator in charge of the burgeoning professional research and technical staff. In 1970 he moved to Jadwin Gym to be the first associate director of athletics. As the steward of Princeton's intercollegiate sports program, he initiated the "Friends" groups of alumni supporters in the early seventies, and, along with associate director Merrilee Baker, developed the women's sports program following the coeducation of the school.

Howell talks proudly of his role in Princeton's sports history. "I arrived when women arrived in athletics," he says. "I think we did it the right way; in fact, in the first five years there wasn't a school in the Ivy League that could come close to us . . . We only responded when the students indicated interest. We did not throw money just aimlessly into a program; we slowly built it up."

Although the development of the women's programs ranks as the most important change in Princeton sports in his tenure at Jadwin, Howell believes a bigger seismic shift lies ahead. "I sense that in the Ivies generally, and indeed nationally," Howell says, "there's going to be a heavy contraction in the funding of athletics." Yale and Brown each recently dropped four sports, and Howell predicts that several of Princeton's thirty-three varsity sports are "on the cusp" of being eliminated or of seeking alumni funding to stay alive.

With characteristic modesty, Howell counts as his greatest achievement one that has been a collaborative accomplishment: his part in recruiting a consistently strong crop of coaches. Princeton's success in this effort is reflected in its position atop the Ivy League's composite varsity rankings for the fourth year in a row.

When Howell retires this month, his colleagues won't have to push him out the door. With the same infectious enthusiasm he has always brought to athletics (he once got his Princeton roommate, no sports fan, to make a large donation for the university's softball field) Howell is now embracing retirement. Lately he has been showing up for work in shorts, tanned, cheerful, and sockless. He plans to do a lot of birding and traveling with Joan, and he is determined to complete the last 800 miles of the 2,000-mile Appalachian Trail. His former coworkers will, however, have a hard time keeping him away from the courts and playing fields of Princeton. Number 20,000 is just around the corner.

of a book by his son, a paratrooper and member of Special Forces, on the Gulf War.

"With the same wife of 63 years and 13 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren (one more due in May), I am happy to report all O.K.," writes Roy Goff from Vineyard Haven, up on the Cape.

We record with sadness the death of Assoc. Mbr. Dottie Booth, loyal member of 1926 and widow of our late Wally Booth, in Kendallville, Ind., Apr. 24.

An up-to-date address for Jack Kirkpatrick is 9 Dove Dr., Ithaca, NY 14850, where he is setting a slower pace, having given up concerts and teaching to devote his time to retirement and three children and nine grandchildren.

From Carmel Valley, Calif., writes Pete Tracy: "I feel lucky and fortunate that I have been keeping up very well—and can attribute it largely to that indefinable something—I'll call it the spirit of '26 and all the members of our Class—it has been a real inspiration and satisfaction to me all these years."

"Red Cross lauds Ralph Martin" was the Salem (Oh.) News front-page banner when Ralph was honored as "Outstanding Man" among 350 volunteers for 22 years of organizational relief work.

"George the Greek" Carlaftes reports on the latest "goofy goings-on at Dear Old Nassau," the saga of James Arthur Hogue—along with a newspaper clipping on famous impostors at Princeton. He wonders if we all remember the K.K.K. parade on Nassau Street. The Sec would welcome any reminiscences, also of 1927 housemates, such as George's at 47 Univ. Place: Walt Carroll, Lam Clifford, Sam McCoy, Hank Swope, and Charlie Wilson.

Here is the correct record of Stu Steinbrink's grand and great-grandchildren: "five grandchildren, without counting their four spouses . . . now its great-grandchildren—and I have three of them."

Kutch Mayers reports that Alumni Day enticed himself and wife, Ros, President Jim Westfall, with three guests, George Denniston, who represented '27 at the Service of Remembrance, Ted and Marie Bachman, Mary Cooley (niece of Sam), and Len Feiner '92, secretary of our reunions in '88, '90, and '91. Kutch and Ros enjoyed three weeks in Florida, attended a convention of barbershop quartets and choruses in Tampa, and visited old friends in Marco Island, Venice, and Sarasota.

Jim Westfall recently received from John Helm, a Princetonian member of his church in Montclair, N.J., a program of the Triangle show SAMARKAND, with all songs and the names of 1927ers with prominent parts: Bill Brenton, Sam Carter, Herb Sanford, Joe Bryan, Franklin Gary, Morgan Reichner, Ave Sherry, Buss Hall, Hubert Royster, and Henry Redmond.

We have received news of Chick Henrick's death in the Canary Islands Mar. 10, after a brief illness. His wife, Pat, said he was in the hospital only five days, "suffering little pain," and "regretting that he might have to miss Reunions for the first time since he graduated."

Jack Sands reports a luncheon with Bernie Thulin and Jack Damerel in Richmond, and "lots of pleasant conversation about the days of yore and the Class of 1927." Bernie and Jack, he says, "have played a lot of golf together through the years."

The annual Spring Picnic of the Class of 1928 was held on Sat., Apr. 20, at the Lenz Tennis Center in Princeton. Present were Helen and Brooks Barlow, Beez Campbell and daughter, Marge and Bill Elliott with nephew and niece, Frances and Joe Gibson, Charlotte and Fred Hyer, Peter and Jim Lee, John McMartin, honorary member Judy McCartin, and tennis coach Dave Benjamin and two sons. The weather did not live up to Princeton's reputation for "golden spring sunshine." In fact, the day was damp and raw, so the tennis matches with Dartmouth were transferred to the indoor courts at Jadwin Gym. This left the tennis center clubhouse as a comfortable accommodation for the Class picnic, and both the luncheon menu and sociability were enjoyed by all. Plans were discussed for the June reunion and the 65th reunion in 1990. There have been recent additions to our "In Memoriam" list. Belatedly we learned from Howard K. Hamm Jr., of the death of his father, Howard K. Hamm, on Sept. 23, 1988, at his home in Kalamazoo, Mich. Howard's wife, Eleanor, died in 1985. Walter B. George of Vincetown, N.J., a native of Princeton and retired N.Y. banker, died Apr. 4. Ed Welles, our champion mile runner and retired bishop of West Missouri, died Apr. 13 at Kansas City, Mo. Sam Payne, an outstanding leader in our Class affairs, after more than a year of declining health, died May 5 at the hospital near Shelburne, Mass. We will miss these classmates and friends, and our deepest sympathy is with the three Hamm sons, Howard, Warren, and Robert, and the surviving widows: Ruth George, Ferne Malcolm Welles, and Sam Payne's widow, Dee Appley, and their families.

We have a memorial in this issue.

Space unfortunately prevents reproducing a photo showing Carolyn and Gar Lasater celebrating a family reunion last Thanksgiving at La Mota, their home in Palfurrias, Tex. Twenty-two people from three generations gathered, including two sons and three daughters, all Princeton. Garland runs a creamery and raises cattle.

How many of us attend a high-school reunion in China? And how many met their wife on a blind date on a tennis court? Tracy Logan grew up in China, and that's how he met his second wife. He still plays tennis, but did have a setback due to a heart condition. He sounded good and chipper on the phone.

A newsy letter from Dick Diebold: "I have sold my sugar ranch in Fla., but still raise cattle at our farm in Roxbury, Conn. After trying Jamaica for four or five years, we sold our house there and built a home in Gasparilla Island, where we spend the winter. I've retired except for personal business. Spend six months in Conn. and six months in Boca Raton, loafing, fishing, and a little golf, enjoying three children, seven grand, and one great-grand. Best regards to all."

Art Knapp '28, of yachting fame, recalls happy memories of Tom Armitage. "Tom was one nice guy. We did the Deb circuit at the Ritz back in 1927, '28 and '29. Haven't seen him since but he still was a GOOD GUY."

Sadly, we lost John M. Hadsall Feb. 8, 1991. A memorial will follow.

HUBERT A. "RED" SCHNEIDER

Bethesda, MD 20814

We had a nice attendance at the Apr. 12 luncheon at the Nassau Club in Princeton. A few regular attendees could not make it this year but their absence was made up by some we had not seen in several years. Present were: Don Dittmars, Charlie Ellis, Fred Frost, Bill Forsyth, Lou Klauder, Charlie Lane, Dave McMullin, Jack Myers, Wally Ruckert, Red Schneider, Merrill Sheppard, George Stallman, Syd Stevens, Dick Wood, and Al Woods. Following the lunch Wally and George Stallman drove down to the Eastern Shore for a weekend at Red's place where they feasted on crab cakes, steamed mussels, oyster stew, she-crab soup, baked catfish, and other assorted goodies. Unfortunately it rained the entire time and they amused themselves looking over the tenth Reunion Year Book, which Fred Smith had sent on for the Class archives.

Dorothy Cornwall writes that Bob had a very serious operation, aneurism of the aorta, in 1986. After being unconscious and in intensive care for three weeks he recovered sufficiently to return home. His loss of memory recovered slowly but on doctor's orders Bob now lives in the Health Center in Sothbury, Conn., while Dorothy lives upstairs in their apartment.

The University advises that John Thatcher left a substantial bequest to the Dept. of Geological and Geophysical Sciences.

Chuck Baton suffered three operations during the past year but he says none were serious and he is back playing golf and fishing.

In April Charlie Lane had a visit in Stuart, Fla. with Steve Stanton and Burt Curry. We have a picture of the three of them and will try to run it in a future issue.

We regret to report the death of Al Crutchfield on Mar. 12, 1991, and on behalf of the Class we extend to Fred Frost, Deke Hersey, and Henry Pierson our deep sympathy on the death of their wives, Skippy, Mary, and Cornelia.

We have memorials in this issue.

A report of our 60th reunion will appear in the July 10 issue along with the football schedule and application forms for reserved seats.

The spring luncheon at the Nassau Club brought forth the following: Mary Atwater, Merritt Cootes, Carolyn and Woody English, Frank Froment, Nancy and Al Gemung, Brice Hereford, Jerry Finch (H), Punch and Dave Kreidler, Betty Mallack, Grace and Whitie Mountain, George McKee, Cathy and Bill Newman, Margaret and Bill Wells, Jane Whitehead, Isabel and Jake Wortendyke, Vee Zellner. This happy group was joined by guests: Aubrey Borland '93, Laura Matlack '91, and Judy McCartin.

Sterling ("Dick") Dickinson has been giving lectures on Mexico at his Instituto Allende, which he originated many years ago. Dick Robinson has a V.C.R. of some former reunions if anyone would like to borrow. Ford truck dealer for many years, Bob White, has turned to real estate and is ready for business.

Just remember that smart is when you believe only half of what you hear. Brilliant is when you know which half to believe.

We regret to report the deaths of Gibbs Baker, Fred Brobyn, Lew Oakley, Richard Hutchinson. We have memorials in this issue.

SOME TRAVEL NOTES: Dave Dana, now living in Marion, Mass., vacationed recently in Barbados and Nevis. He has a grandson, Steven Dana, in the Class of 1994. Bob Grosjean and his wife, Penny, stopped in to see Jack Cotton in Clearwater Beach, Fla., on their way to New Canaan, Brussels, and Perth (Perth??). Harry Blackiston has returned from a salmon-fishing trip in Canada with his two sons following that with a trip to Idaho for trout. Harry says that the happiest years of his life have been spent since his retirement to Charlottesville in 1976. Totally recovered from a heart attack some years back, he now gardens with great energy, keeping his chain saw, his log splitter, and his weed eater hot.

Another 50th wedding anniversary has come and gone. The Don Randells celebrated theirs at a gala on their Pine Island (Fla.) property. A full program included the Santa Gertrudis Girls' Choir, naturalist walks, and explanatory lectures by a professional archaeologist on the Calusa Indian shell mounds, whose excavations the Randells have been sponsoring now for a good many years.

Literary efforts by '32ers crop up in all sorts of places, even in that bastion of Eastern Establishmentarianism, New York's Century Club, where member Peter Schwed has recently published a detailed booklet explaining to other members how to use the club's very large library, many of whose shelves are crammed by the works of club members, including several by Peter himself.

Oh yes, that musical quiz: The man who played the piccolo in the band and the oboe in the University orchestra was Don Curtis. The man who played the clarinet in the band, the violin in the orchestra, and drums in the instrumental clubs was Dutch Leubausen.

We have a memorial in this issue.

ARTHUR MOODY
600 E. Cathedral Rd., Apt. A314
Philadelphia, PA 19128

Come one, come all to Sky Top in the fall, Oct. 15-17. Please note Frank Townsend's statement that we have reserved a block of 25 rooms. So far the response is strong, and we may well need more. This in turn points up the need for an early reservation: if we wait too long we may not be able to get more rooms. So—get those reservations in promptly.

The April 25 Nassau Club lunch was attended by nine classmates, plus Judy McCartin of the Annual Giving office. She had been helping Curly Marsb search the archives at the Seeley Mudd Library. This is a facility that perhaps more classmates should be familiar with. It has files of the DAILY PRINCETONIAN, NASSAU LIT, NASSAU HERALD, BRIC-A-BRAC, and much other material. Curly was looking for photos to use in the summer newsletter, especially for the cover. He used the luncheon group as a panel to guide him in his selections.

Charlie Davis presented Lou Reik as co-chairman of reunions. Lou handled this year's June reunion, now past. We will have one more reunion at the Graduate College. Then, in 1993—our 60th at the Nassau Inn.

Others present on the 25th were Ray Carter, Brad Green (whose name was omitted from the list of those attending Jack Stokes's funeral), Ed Holschub, Dave Ludlum, Art Moody, and Jack Pyle.

IN MEMORIAM: Charlie Root died Mar. 27, 1991. Charlie lived in Cold Spring Harbor, N.Y. Jack Kraft died Apr. 13, 1991, in Naples, Fla. He lived there and in Pittsburgh. We have memorials in this issue.

Vic Armstrong, who has lived in Phoenix since 1936 and been associated with Lawyers Title Insurance Corp. since 1964, is still with the company although he "retired" in 1976.

Dudley Johnson, who taught English at Princeton for 38 years, is quoted in the current HARVARD magazine following the election of Neil L. Rudenstine '56 as Harvard's president. As an undergraduate, Rudenstine was in the Special Program in the Humanities, which Dudley described as "an interdepartmental program that required a great breadth of interest... [Rudenstine] was certainly one of the brightest men in the class."

Wells Newell, who is reportedly in excellent health, keeps busy with a variety of activities. He gave a St. Patrick's Day party, at which Larry D'Elena was a guest, at his new address in N.Y.C.: 201 E. 87th St., NY 10128.

Dorothy (Dot) and Bill Reitzell celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in December. Bill met Dot (Garrett), a 1935 Smith graduate, in India when he worked there for Standard Vacuum Oil Co. before WWII. He and Dot have lived in Worcester, Mass., since 1946.

Mike Wister, while visiting Amelia Island, Fla., last winter, reunited in nearby Ponte Vedra with Bill Cosby, John Gurney, Tome Homan and Johnny Searles, all of whom are year-round Ponte Vedra residents.

Coleman Benedict, in a note to Henry Thielbar, our V.P. for Annual Giving: "Thanks for taking on the job of getting us to shake out some of our pesos." Pesos and checks (made to P.U.) are sent to Thielbar at Box 5468, Charlottesville, VA 22905.

Some class!

AND THE WINNERS ARE: With the retirement of Doug Ward as Class president at the end of his three-year term, Will Harrington assumed his responsibilities on Reunions Weekend. He and the slate of other officers proposed by the nominating committee were unanimously elected by the 134 classmates (44 per cent of the class roll) who returned their ballots prior to the May 1 deadline. Will's fellow officers are First V.P. Bob Winters, Second V.P. Tom McCabe, Secretary Eldon Earle, and Treasurer Matty Matthews. In accordance with the Class constitution, all five will serve until the 59th reunion in 1994.

WINTER RENDEZVOUS. Notes on the election ballots show that at different times and in different places 20 classmates got together this past winter: Doug Galloway with Ray Meadowcroft in La Grange Park, Ill.; Carl Dittmann with Bill Beason and Jack Kelbaugh in Naples, Fla. and with Campbell Koehn in Dunedin, Fla.; Joe Hazen with Gordon Craig and Tony Rytina in Plainfield, N.J., with El Fleming and Doug Ward in Stuart, Fla., with Bill Cochran, Jim Crane, and Don O'Meara in Vero Beach, Fla., and with Jack Brown and Bill Moulton in St. Croix; Art Northwood with Jack Taylor also in St. Croix; and Nort Schonfeld with El Fleming, Gil Garretson, Clark Tower, and Doug Ward in Jensen Beach, Fla.

IN MEMORIAM. Also on an election ballot dated March 28 was a note from Jack Niedringhaus of Arnold, Md. regretting his inability to attend the 56th reunion because of a broken arm and the prospect of hip replacement surgery. Jack, who was born Feb. 25, 1913, died of cancer Apr. 16, 1991.

We have a memorial in this issue.

Pictured is Don Colvin on his recent 76th birthday at the Sun Cities Art Museum (Ariz.), where he serves as second V.P. Note the ceramic tiger cub wearing sun glasses to protect his eyes from the bright Arizona sunlight! Don is also a trustee of his local symphony orchestra association.

Last call! If Class Agent Ned Williams, 124 Notoway Dr., Penllyn, PA 19422, receives your Annual Giving gift by June 30, it will be recorded towards our campaign striving to set a new record for classes 55 years out of Princeton. By a great effort we can do it as we did for our 50th.

Bill Morris and Eleanor are indeed proud of their grandsons Charlie Morris '92 and Jamie Farnham who will enter with the Class of '95.

Brooks Robinson, of Great Falls, Mont., earlier this year visited Frank Newman of Palm Desert, Calif., and Lee Heuser in Tubac, Ariz.

In June 1989, Harry Crawford had coronary bypass surgery. Last winter he skied 14 days! He conducts classes for the A.A.R.P. driver refresher courses and by the end of May graduated more than 100 "safe drivers."

More Health Notes: We wish Harry Holmes improved health. Bill Fackert reports that he underwent a carotid replacement at Mayo Clinic in March and feels fortunate to have recovered completely from that as well as from a lymphoma contracted about a year ago.

We have memorials in this issue.

GRANDCHILDREN DEPT.: To Shirley and Norm Stoner, their first, Samantha, via son Martin and wife, Jill, both violinists. Son Robert, an economist with a consulting firm in Washington, D.C., is engaged to another economist, Randi, who worked with the Council of Economic Advisors at the White House last summer, while son Doug is finishing a postdoctoral fellowship at Stanford's Hopkins Marine Station in Monterey. Jack Eberhardt's son Dave, our banner carrier in the P-rade for over 20 years, and wife, Debbie, produced grandson Tyler Avery, their first child, Jack's fourth grandchild. Don Lynch's son Rob adopted a boy, loaded with the name Benjamin Harris Kempner Lynch, though doesn't "favor my good looks." Don's other grandchild Mimi is at Choate. Don himself has undergone surgery, decompressive lamicectomy (?).

Mary and John Pritchard ten years ago decided to stop building "second" homes for people and start building homes for people who had never had one, with Habitat for Humanity/Kansas City Inc. The tenth anniversary was celebrated at a dinner attended by several new homeowners at the Penn Valley Community College. "Habitat gives people hope; it's an opportunity to feel like you're part of society."

MEDICAL NOTES. Pete Cook with an obstructed intestine; Max Krebs with an open heart by-pass.

John Farley's widow, Pat, recently, after 46 years, received the British Defence and War Medals to recognize her three-and-a-half years' service in the Wrens in WWII. She performed tests on ships that were "degaussed," a top-secret operation in which the hulls of ships were demagnetized to avoid magnetic mines. She met John at a Christmas Eve dance in 1943 in Scotland. John returned from mainland Europe and couldn't find her. He went to see her father and the receptionist asked why he wanted to see him. He replied: "I'm Lt. Farley and I've come to marry his daughter."

Dr. Al Mendeloff confines his medical endeavors to teaching and editing, but only for 25 hours per week, which provides time for visiting his grandchildren.

The Reverend Vru Vruwink keeps busy at Christ Church, Seattle, doing as he likes and enjoying his nine grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

But Bailey Cowan puts Vru in the shade with his 12 grandchildren, all of whom and Margie celebrated his 75th birthday at Christmastide.

Betty and Jere Patterson spent a winter weekend in Pinehurst, N.C. and found Mary Rose and Jack Busby enjoying life in an attractive lakeview home. Jack continues to play golf in or near par, as he did at Springdale, in spite of a somewhat constricted swing.

Lloyd Lochridge, ably assisted by son Pat '72, demonstrated that he isn't ready to hang up his spikes by winning a multi-million dollar lawsuit for a hotel owner against a large hotel accounting and consulting firm which issued a virulent "hatchet job" financial report, which resulted in its going into bankruptcy. The Lochridges convinced the jury that the report was a deceptive trade practice, was grossly negligent, libelous, etc. Don't mess around with them Texans!

In working as class agent for his Lawrenceville Class of '34, Fred King located our elusive Oliver Brooks at Lost Acre Farm, New Preston, Conn., but had no luck with Stephen Powell, last reported in Pacific Palisades, Calif.

We report with sadness the deaths of Fisk Whitehead in July 1990, and his wife two months later, Vance Carnahan Dec. 18; Stan Walsh Jan. 30; Ian Hunter Mar. 5; Bud Hall Mar. 31; and John C. Clark Apr. 7. Memorials will follow. We have memorials in this issue.

39 RICHARD R. UHL
12 Charlotte Ct.
Briarcliff Manor, NY 10510

During an airport stop on their travels last September, Marion and Hap Turner posed to prove they've got that tiger spirit.

In the Apr. 1 NEW YORKER, Clark Clifford's memoirs THE TRUMAN YEARS contained a glowing reference to a classmate: "Fortunately the perfect person to help me was already in place. As always, I turned with confidence to George M. Elsey, my only aide." Such praise for George does not surprise us, but we were surprised and pleased to note it appeared on page 39.

George in turn supplied us with an article from the current HARVARD magazine also with a reference of interest to our Class. In an interview with Neil Rudenstine about events on the day of his appointment as President-elect of Harvard, he gave this personal insight: "Before we went downstairs we called my mother. And Suzanne Verdery, the wife of the late headmaster of the Wooster School, who was my headmaster. John Verdery had plucked me out of the eighth grade at Danbury Middle School and offered me a full scholarship to go to Wooster as a boarding student, and that really led to my going to Princeton eventually and to Harvard and to all the rest of it." So—there's a little touch of P'39 at Harvard now.

A crowd of 47 packed our annual lunch at Princeton Club of N.Y. to hear a fascinating talk, "The Middle East After Desert Storm," given by John Waterbury '61, professor of politics and international affairs at the Woodrow Wilson School. Long-distance prize went to Hin Barrett from Charlottesville, Prince Edward Island, Canada.

With sorrow we report the death of Charlie Detwiler. A memorial will follow.

Well, well. And just who do we picture here? Why, 'tis none other than that peerless pair of FORTY'S FINEST, namely Ben Tate and Mac Mackenzie participating wholeheartedly in the happy times and friendship renewals enjoyed by so many of us at our 50th reunion. May they and all of 1940 return regularly to more of these merry gatherings in the years to come.

In May of this year, Johnny Lauritzen, chairman of the First Natl. Bank of Omaha, was to be awarded doctor of laws degree by Dana College in Blair, Neb. In his long and successful banking career, Johnny has been an innovator of numerous products for the industry, including the "First Charge Card" in 1953, resulting in the credit cards now known as Visa and MasterCard. A front runner in the Omaha community, he serves a host of philanthropic, educational, and cultural endeavors and over the years has been a generous supporter of Dana College. In addition, Johnny and his son Bruce '65 have been named "Great Danes of Dana College"—an honor recognizing outstanding leaders of Danish descent who have distinguished themselves in their professions.

In March the Rev. Syd Woodd-Cabusac baptized Francis Ellis, son of Marion Freeman Ellis '73, grandson of our Dave Freeman, and great-grandson of Halsted Freeman '03. This now makes four generations of the Freeman family with whom Syd has been associated. Dave and Syd were roommates at Yale law school and Syd is also godfather to Dave's oldest son.

A thoughtful gentleman from the West Coast has confessed that he found a 1941 beer jacket while cleaning out a dorm closet back in the early 1950s. Dr. Charles L. Ruby '52, 654 Sausalito Blvd., Sausalito, CA 94965 (415-332-9263) will gladly donate it, "yellowed and beer-stained," to a first-caller from the S.F. Bay Area. This sounds like altruism, but we suspect that Dr. Ruby will enjoy a whopping contribution deduction for parting with such a sacred relic.

Class Notes in the Charlie Barton go-go decades were filled with career advancement news. Now, not quite never. Larry Ackard has just been made V.P. and executive director of the Jon Douglas Training Center (real estate) out in La-La-Land; 213-477-6766. Congratulations, Larry and Nancy ... Erica and "Hoopoo" Harper's book OBJECTIVE EXAMINATIONS, on teaching in India, will shortly go into a second printing. Prentice-Hall is the publisher.

Dave Allerdice, of immortal memory, had a large share in marking the first "X" on the battered head of the poor bulldog in our Class logo. On Nov. 14, 1938, the PRINCE reported, "The talented young scion of a football family is only a Sophomore, but already he possesses a veteran's coolness and self-possession under fire. Playing in his first Yale game, calling signals for the first time in his life, Allerdice was under the kind of pressure that makes a quarterback lose his head. Yet he performed with the unruffled calm of a player of twice his experience and completed ten out of 16 forward passes."

The article also praised the outstanding offense/defense play of Jim Aubrey, Thacher Longstreth, and Howie Stanley.

"Curley" Bill of North Amherst, Mass., died in the Hartford Hospital on April. 5, 1991. And Bob Rowley of Rock Hill, N.Y., died two days later. Anne and Joan survive them. Joe Faurell of Pittsburgh, a recent widower, passed away back in Oct. 1990. We have memorials in this issue.

"Here's a '42er you haven't contacted yet," Sew Wagner (Tenn.) writes to Class Agent Jim McCabe of the photo above. "He's raring to be back for the big 50th."

Two brief golfer notes: Tex Farrington (S.C.) was a marshal again this year for the Heritage Tournament at Hilton Head. Jack Stevenson (D.C.) was given a bronzed scorecard for his Jan. hole-in-one by a group of friends recently.

The '42 Directory was mailed Apr. 30. A few days later, ten changes of address came from the University, and, shortly after that, Charlie Hardin reported that some area code 201 numbers will become area code 908 in June. Catherine Gardiner (Calif.), John Joslin Gardiner's widow, is correctly listed as Mrs. Benjamin Webb, but '42 News failed to record her remarriage in its Congratulations & Best Wishes section. They're offered warmly now.

El and Marion Phillips (Vt.) took "a Christmas-card trip" in March-April to catch up with friends seen too infrequently. They report seeing the Baileys (N.C.), Eisenbarts (Va.), Grovers (Fla.), Vivians (N.J.), and, later, the Schreibers in Connecticut.

Brief word from Bill Osborn (N.Y.), "Retired Jan. 1, 1990. In good health." Another from Dick White (Fla.), "See you at the big Five-0." And Slade Innis (Calif.) writes, "Princeton is important to me even though I transferred in my junior year. I won't be coming back, but wish all my classmates the best of health, memories, and positive attitude."

Next column will be Hank Austin's report of the great 49th Rehearsal Reunion, history as you read this.

We have a memorial in this issue.

On April 18, Mary and Ted Rockwell blew into town to visit daughter Juanita, artistic director of one of Hartford's major theater groups. We attended the then-current play, TANTALUS; afterwards, Jo, I, and the Rockwells three had a merry mini-reunion over lunch. The only downside to our visit together was to learn of the death the day before (Apr. 17) of Sharon Risk. A Class memorial for Sharon will follow in a subsequent PAW issue.

Dick Velt messages that he has moved from Connecticut to Colorado. He asks all and sundry to note his new address: Box 114, Carbondale, CO 81623.

Bart Farr has finally packed it in so far as working is concerned. He wrote: "Retired. Enjoying it. Live part time in Winston-Salem, part time in Naples, Fla."

Another retiree is Doctor George Collins. He devotes the majority of his time to golf and travel. "Best to all who remember me," he wrote, "because I was at Princeton with 1943 only one year. I graduated Class of 1945 at Yale. Princeton, however, is my first love."

Ed McKeown, out in California, recently underwent some major surgery: "Lost part of my stomach to a bleeding ulcer—hitherto undetected—in early February. Recovering okay. Who knew that retirement could cause ulcers?"

Bucking the ever-growing roster of sun, surf, golf, and travel devotees, Johnny Durell wrote recently: "No thoughts of retiring, since eating is high on the list of things I enjoy. Still get high on flying, which is the number two non-work occupation. Bragging rights consist of grandson (only grandchild) Kenneth Hamilton Durell (16 mos.), son of Robert '75."

Jim Arnold enters the grandchild sweepstakes with two males, "about 2½ and one year old."

Dick Furlaud and Bud Palmer got together for some March skiing at Arrowhead, Colo., and graphically revealed the vigor still very much a part of '44.

The New Orleans Mini, beautifully orchestrated by Betsy and Brisson Woods, and backed by Molly and John Ware, was a smash delight. Sixty-one souls were charmed by four kaleidoscopic days of homes, gardens, bistros, paddle-wheel cruising, jazz, and fellowship. Thirty classmates, 27 wives, three widows, and a friend savored this Creole frolic: Accolas, Batbelors, Conwells, Eastmans, Gibbs, Alan Goodfellow, Gordons, Graces, Forrest Holmes, Ruth Howell, Ivins, Keenans, Koribs, Lees, MacDonalds, McManuses, Grace McPberson, Metcalfes, Millers, Munyans, Murdocks, Nalles, Palmeres, Henry Patterson, Shafers, Soudens, Spechts, Thomsons, Cynthia Thorburn, a friend of Grace McP's, Lynn Tribble, Wares, Woodbridges, and Woods. A grand time! Stay tuned for Bermuda.

WILD PROBABILITY DEPT. Gid Upton's daughter, "Souci" entered Brigham Women's Hospital in Boston for her delivery this March. Her baby daughter arrived on Mar. 10, without prior arrangement, at the skilled hands of Dr. Leila Schueler, none other the daughter of Gid's forever buddy and roomie of Andover and Nassau days, Dick Schueler! While on infants, a new Class granddaughter was born in Philadelphia on Feb. 28. She is Charlotte Cory Hass, daughter of Tony's son, Jay Hass '83, and Babbie and Horace Nalle's daughter, Ellen Nalle Hass. With two classmates as grandfathers, Charlotte is an obvious shoe-in for the Class of 2013!

Reunion material from our 47th would be appreciated. Have a grand summer.

WARREN W. EMMON
U.S. Courthouse, 915 Lafayette Blvd.

Double congratulations to Brigadier General, the Honorable William R. Crosbie. Bill broke out two bottles of champagne this year. He prevailed with an overwhelming vote of confidence in a hotly contested re-election campaign for Tarrytown, N.Y. village justice. Coincidentally, he was promoted to N.Y. State Guard general officer status and alerted for Persian Gulf service, an obligation aborted only by the legerdemain of Stormin' Norman.

The Reverend Benjamin Pierson Ford III last reported in our 25th reunion book as a missionary vicar to the Navajo Indians in Farmington, New Mexico. He married the former Priscilla Whitcomb (Wellesley '47), and they had three children. Prophetically, Ben then noted that he was contemplating Maine coast retirement, but Priscilla wanted California. Ben prevailed and they now reside in bucolic Waldoboro, Me., home of the hulk of the five-masted schooner, CORA CRESSY.

Ben left the Navajos in 1974 to become rector of a suburban Indianapolis parish. In 1981 he and Priscilla ventured to Belize, where he supervised seven congregations, including a mental hospital. By dugout canoe, he conducted services at small fishing villages unreachable by road. A memorable experience was sleeping in a tiny house on pilings overlooking a beautiful Caribbean beach framed by coconut palms. After three years in Belize, Ben went to England as assistant in St. James Church, Grimsby. After two years, he and Priscilla retired to Maine, where they are only three miles from famed Moody's Diner on Route One in Waldoboro, noted for its custard pie.

Our post-reunion column will appear in the next issue. Bill Jackson writes that "after 35 delightful years of teaching" he has accepted a job on the cruising staff of the Royal Viking Lines. Jim Shenfield is shocked by two occurrences: Princeton's loss to Columbia last fall, and "a continual move toward the liberal persuasion on the part of the Princeton administration." Dick Armstrong is professor emeritus at Princeton Theological Seminary, and devotes most of his time to writing. Dick Sayre, from Rancho Mirage, Calif., says he splits his time between Maui and California, with trips to the industrial south—namely, the Caribbean. Harry Webster from, Potomac, Md., says he now has three granddaughters, four children (three of whom are teachers), and Ann, his one and only wife. He teaches anthropology at George Washington in D.C. Bob Bosworth, from Denver, is fully retired. "The only unhappy one is my friendly banker. I'm much too busy to do the things I should do—mañana." Reeves Hicks, after 17 years on Pheasant Hill Rd., received an unsolicited proposition he couldn't turn down. He is now in a smaller house closer to town, and bought another one in Oxford, Md. Two for the price of one. George Shtinas says his tennis-playing son Leif '81 and wife, Maria, are proud parents—their first. The child's grandfather won Milwaukee's University Club squash tournament for the first time since 1981. Ernest Savage writes Charlie Brown, "As a golfer, you might appreciate this is my second year in a row getting a hole-in-one. I now have five." Ken Zabriskie is now leading in the grandfather derby with 12. However, six are step-grandchildren. "But," he says, "I have two daughters marrying this summer." Haich Seidel advises he is still director of medical education at Hollywood Memorial, Fla. Bob Shedd is still in geriatric practice. He tells his patients to lead an active life; talk about practicing what you preach. Jim Wells, from Boynton Beach, Fla., has enrolled in law school. "My wife, children and grandchildren think I'm either crazy or in second childhood. They are probably right on both counts."

Brant Henderson had such a good time at the S.F. Megablast (evident in photo) that he has joined the "definites" for Kohler/Chicago in September. So have Bryan, Haertler, Oates, Pearson, and Sheridan. And the "probables" have increased, too, with Campbell, Decker, Hanson, Sensenbrenner, and Tritsch bringing the two-list total to a fabulous 40! Bob Venturi thrice graced the pages of the N.Y. TIMES in April, beginning with the announcement he is the 1991 winner of the $100,000 Pritzker Architecture Prize, roughly his profession's equivalent of the Nobel. Then came news that his Philadelphia-based firm has been selected by the Smithsonian Inst. to develop master architectural program requirements and criteria for design of the new Natl. Museum of the American Indian in Suitland, Md. (His talented partner and wife, Denise Scott Brown, is principal architect on the project.) Finally, a half-page testimonial, with two pictures, saluted the "Gentle Subverter of Modernism."

Elliot Middleton, M.D., received the Distinguished Service Award for lifelong contributions to the American Academy of Allergy and Immunology in March, the same month Princeton trustee John Weinberg gave a gift to establish a visiting professorship in the Woodrow Wilson School to honor his recent retirement as chairman of Goldman, Sachs. Allen Reichner also enjoyed recognition: Old Nassau admitted daughter Cristina, a fourth-generation enrollee.

Arnie Pratman hosted another stellar cocktail party Apr. 24 at the Cosmopolitan Club in N.Y.C., attracting Bennett, Blahr (first appearance at a Class function in years), Boyle, Bryan, Campbell, Eggers, Fatzner, Fischler, Goldstein, Goodnow, Hatterer, Heiserman, Held, Hugbison, Kean, Klingenstein, Malm, McKeown, Pearson, Stevenson, Struby, Talley, and Wiman.

Bill Wright and John Pershing each has requested help from 25 additional classmates by June 30 to meet their 1991 A.G. and dues goals. They and I wish all hands a wunderbar summer.

U.S.S. PRINCETON
1898-1919

Sergio Bonotto took early retirement from Union Carbide some years ago when a hostile takeover attempt made life at Carbide a bit on the treacherous side. Since then Sergio has suffered anything but accidia. His new career is devoted to making note cards and prints of irresistible subjects such as the Mather Sundial, Palmer Square, Nassau Hall and Torino, Italy. Recently his artistic triumphs were on exhibit at a local bank. Pictured here is his U.S.S. PRINCETON (1898-1919). Sergio claims that after-tax remuneration provides Claude, his cat, with an upscale gourmet diet.

Professor Mike Keeley is a classical scholar, novelist, translator (Cavafy, Nobel Prize winner Odysseus Elytis, Yannis Ritsos), moving spirit of the Program on Hellenic Studies and all-around man of letters. Now the N.Y. TIMES reports he is hanging out with the likes of Tina Brown (editor of VANITY FAIR), Larry McMurty (author of LONESOME DOVE), E.L. Doctorow, Kurt Vonnegut, Robert Caro '57 (Lyndon Johnson's biographer) and a galaxy of literary luminaries. It turns out that our Mike is president-elect of PEN, an international group that defends freedom of expression throughout the world.

Conny Hunter has been out on the coast at U.C.L.A. for third son Stan's graduation from the Graduate School of Architecture/Urban Design. André Yokana takes time out from back operation recuperation to dote on granddaughter Alice, now a year old.

Here's a summary of a WALL STREET JOURNAL article Herb Spencer spotted and sent along, concerning the part Jack Pemberton played in solving a major art theft. Friends of Jack in Zurich felt a Benin bronze head being offered in a local auction looked suspiciously like one stolen from the museum in Jos, Nigeria, in 1987. They were concerned that a buyer might acquire good title to it under Swiss law, and contacted Jack, who has done extensive research on African religion, culture, and art. He checked with I.F.A.R., the Intl. Foundation for Art Research. With only ten days remaining before the sale, Jack and I.F.A.R. were able to get a Swiss museum director to intervene. They persuaded the local Nigerian cultural authorities to bring suit against the consignor, and an injunction to stop the sale. The day before the auction, the head was officially identified as the stolen one, and, with appropriate subsequent ceremony, Nigeria's ambassador to Switzerland was presented with the head, and personally carried it back to Nigeria.

The December issue of YANKEE magazine carried a fascinating seven-page illustrated article about our own Ed Sawyer, and the complications following his purchase of East Mountain, highest peak in Vermont's Northeast Kingdom, 25 years ago. To summarize: Ed and Irene live in East Burke, near East Mountain, where their company handcrafts wooden children's toys and furniture under the name Old Tyme Toy Co. In the 1950s the U.S. Air Force, at a cost of $21 million, built a radar tower and service facility on the mountain. In 1965 the government offered the whole shebang to the highest bidder, and Ed won it for $42,000! He had dreams for the mountain, they moved their factory there for a while, but isolation, weather, trespass, vandalism problems, forced them to abandon living and working there. Ed still owns 250 acres of mountaintop, 12 miles of road, the 23 buildings, and would like to sell it to someone who'd make it useful to the public. If you're headed Vermont way this summer, Ed and Irene would be glad to see you. Write them at P.O. Box 296, East Burke, VT 05832 or call 802-626-9565.

We sadly report the passing of Robert Gumalka Gallagher of Palm Coast, Fla., on Mar. 12, 1991. A Class memorial is being prepared.

Stan Johnson, the chaplain at Penn, achieved some notoriety in the Philadelphia papers for his introduction of Thach Longstreth '41 at a Penn dinner. During the introduction, Stan, as befits a man of the cloth, demonstrated his neutrality by stripping off his orange-and-black necktie and shirt to reveal a Penn t-shirt beneath. Thach, not a bit nonplussed, responded by tearing off his own Tiger tie and shirt to reveal (in the newspaper's words)—"well, more Thacher."

Ken Underwood is still in the active practice of architecture in Newark. His son K.C., who was married last May, is following in dad's footsteps, currently working on his master's in architecture at Syracuse. The 1917 column recently credited Doc Shanley with the lead role in establishing the Joseph Sanford Shanley Class of 1917 Prize for Excellence in Architecture, which is awarded annually to the outstanding undergraduate in the School of Architecture. Doc's father had a distinguished career as an architect, gaining particular recognition for his churches. Bill Abrens, our architect in Rome, and wife, Joyce, were made a knight of Malta and dame of Malta respectively in 1990, both by the American Assn. and Roman Priory.

The BUSINESS HISTORY BULLETIN of the Hagley Museum & Library in Wilmington, Del., printed a fascinating interview with Hank Rentschler. Hank, as president of Baldwin-Hamilton Co. of Malvern, Penn., runs an operation whose primary business is furnishing spare parts for the repair and maintenance of the remaining equipment once manufactured by the company and its predecessors. Accordingly, the historical records that are used to fabricate spare parts have become primary assets. A major focus of the article was on the historical preservation of business records generally. Noting that Britain has done a much better job in this regard, Hank expressed a strong position for responsible corporate leaders to demonstrate a sense of citizenship and help preserve the important parts of our heritage.

One of the hottest potatoes in Washington these days is the proposed closing of military bases. Gored oxen litter the landscape. The President's Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission is wrangling over the defense secretary's hot list and is expected to send its recommendations to Mr. Bush by July 1. Sandy Trowbridge, secretary of commerce in the Johnson administration and former president of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, is a member of the commission.

In an early May wire service report, Mark Roberts, assistant director of economic research for the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in Washington, was quoted as saying that, even if the recession were to end soon, there will "still be a big increase in the unemployment rate and the number of unemployed."

Charlie Ganoes ran in the Boston Marathon in April. His 4:41 time was not as good as he had hoped but the hills towards the end tend to soften whatever starch one has left. He has run in two other of the world's Big Four (Berlin and London) and plans to do N.Y. in November.

Waldo Johnson retired last October after 36 years with what is now CIGNA Corp. "It has been a most pleasant experience to engage in areas of interest which time simply did not permit in the past."

Dick Valentzas reports that son Erik (U.S.M.A. '88) was in Saudi Arabia as leader of a mortar platoon in the 101st Airborne Division.

Arch Hewitt has retired as dean of St. Peter's Episcopal Cathedral in Helena, Mont. He has taken on an interim ministry in Williston and Cartwright in northwest North Dakota. He and Gail hope that an interim post might open up on Oahu, where son Jud is a researcher at the Univ. of Hawaii. Dan is an aerospace engineer in Dallas and Sam is in funds management with N.C.N.B. in Charlotte.

The Philadelphia mini-reunion Apr. 25-28 was a Liberty Bell ringing success. Under the leadership of John Clutz, George Aman, Stokes Carrigan, Tom Daubert, George McNelis, Jay Sherrerd, Dave Warner and their wives, a total of 114 classmates, spouses, offspring, or others participated. A highlight of the Saturday night finale dinner was a speech by Thacher Longstreth '41, a persistent candidate and sometime office-holder in Philly, who declared that "experience is what you get when you don't get what you want."

Several awards were given, including those to Wim Van Eekelen, who came from London, for the longest distance traveled, and Eric Merrifield from Seattle for the longest North American distance.

Joe Bolster was presented with a pewter pitcher for his 38 years of service to Princeton and exceptional assistance to the Class, and Jack Joyce received one for his service to the Class, especially as reunion chairman, and to the Princeton Plasma Physics Lab. Jack recently retired to Maine and, occasionally, Wyoming.

From Connie Sidamon-Eristoff and Bob Zabel comes the joint announcement of their granddaughter, Elizabeth, the offspring of Nancy (Zabel) '81 and Simon Sidamon-Eristoff '80. Both grandfathers are reported recovering nicely. Preparations are being made to enroll Liz in the class of 2013.

George Nankervis, chief of pediatrics at Children's Medical Center in Akron, was quoted and pictured in the N.Y. TIMES in a story about the risks to patients from a doctor who died of AIDS.

Doc Buyers was featured in FORBES magazine for his successful leveraged buyout of C. Brewer & Co., the world's largest macadamia nut and guava company. FORBES concluded the deal worked because it was run by Doc, "who knew the business rather than by a bunch of financial types who wouldn't have known a macadamia nut from a pay-in-kind debenture."

I regret to report the death of Ken Mitchell several months ago in Seattle. We have a memorial in this issue.

We recently received a letter from Andy Cowherd '74 that may be of interest to those of us who have "Off-Islander" connections. Andy heads the P.A.A. of Nantucket Island and notes that the majority of their members are non-residents. His problem (though not major) is locating Princetonians who visit the island during the summer so that they can invite them to their annual outing—this year on Aug. 23 at the Sankaty Beach Club. Last year 200 Princetonians and their families attended, so if any of you are planning a summer sojourn, please contact Andy at 6 Pembroke Rd., Summit, NJ 07901; 908-273-7266 (h) or 212-454-3164 (o).

As noted above, the Philly crew are charging ahead with the fall reunion. There is a full schedule of activities planned for Friday to Sunday, Oct. 18-20, including a trip to Longwood Gardens and the Brandywine Museum. Chairman Peter Benoliel tells us that an announcement and registration form are in the works and will be sent to all around the first of June.

looking forward to sitting in the owner's box, Tom Watson Brown stepped up to the goal post and made a "solid investment" in a high-potential N.F.L. program. Tom is an attorney in Atlanta for a prestigious firm (his own) and also interviews and selects judicial candidates for various federal agencies. Tom promises a play-off contender this year.

Don Botto is keeping on at Goodyear and planning for his "Good Years" (in 3-5 years) pursuing a Ph.D. in business education. Horace Allen, a professor of theology at B.U., was privileged to preach at Westminster Abbey.

Joe Johnston and Bliss McCrum hosted the second annual Foreign Policy Seminar. "The Middle East—Past, Present, and Future" was profoundly discussed by Carl Brown, professor of Near Eastern Studies, Dave Beck, State Dept. ambassador dealing with the United Arab Emirates, and our own Nick Angell. Attendees included Bob Bierni, Gerry Kaiser, Sandy Nemitz, Tom Carson, George Beatty, Bill Hawley, Walt Corson, Jerry Muys, Bill Flury, Dave Bradley, John Wood, John Wainwright, and George Sbriver. Gordon Douglas, shown relaxing at our 35th, makes news on two fronts. He was named president of the new vaccine division of Merck & Co., while at home, Ann and Gordon's son Timothy '86 became engaged to Anne Seidel. Tim is a fixed-income bond trader with Salomon Brothers in N.Y.C. Harry Berkowitz took over as executive in charge of the Yale Coop in May. Cos Bernard, chairman of the dept. of pathology and laboratory medicine at St. Jude Children's Research Hospital, Memphis, was installed as president of the U.S. and Canadian Academy of Pathology. Cos is a specialist in cancers of the immune system such as leukemia and lymphomas.

Charlie Coker has been inducted into the South Carolina Business Hall of Fame. Charlie, chief of Sonoco Products Co., serves on the boards of N.C.N.B., Springs Industries, and Sara Lee.

Roger Lloyd received his M.A. in philosophy from London Univ. (Birkbeck College) this past autumn. John Sorenson is "newly, happily, and busily at work as interim associate pastor for outreach ministries at the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Dayton, Oh. I expect to be here 1½ to two years. My wonderful wife, Pat, has made our little rental house "home." This is our Project '55!"

Westchester County's SUBURBAN PEOPLE profiled Stan Rubin recently with an extensive examination of his early and continuing devotion and prominence in the world of popular music.

John Hoffman and Jean now have eight grandchildren. Any one top that?

On Mar. 10, in lovely McLean, Va., Jack Veatch committed matrimony, taking as his bride Louise Andréa Ferreras, a native of Bryn Mawr, Penn., and for the past 20 years a resident of Washington, where she is a training consultant for both the federal government and private business. The first thing Louise said after the ceremony was "Now, what's this I hear about Princeton reunions?" so Jack promised to show her.

Jim Halloran missed our 35th because his wife, Charlotte, was spending June 8 receiving her doctorate in clinical psychology at Wright State. Her proud hubby assures us he'll be at our 40th.

The new Haughton Murphy mystery, MURDER SAVES FACE, hit the bookstores recently, with predictable results. Jim Duffy stands revealed as the author on the dust jacket, and about time. As Jim's series of Reuben Frost adventures continues, his authorial hand becomes ever surer and more in control. This one is the best yet.

Out in L.A., Sol Rosenthal has been elected to the board of governors of the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences. Sol is the partner in charge of entertainment law at the firm of Buchalter, Nemer, Fields, and Younger.

Bill Lawlor and Jack Tindall and their wives (Blair and Adrienne) hosted Irene and Coleman Brown when the Browns visited Chicago in April to perform a wedding. The two Brown children are now married, and Coleman's academic and pastoral career at Colgate is prospering.

We must report the death of three classmates, Randy Neptun (Jan. 12), John Mylod (Jan. 18), and Hugh Williams (Apr. 13). Memorials will follow.

John Eaton: "Probably moving to Chicago to take up post in composition at Univ. of Chicago." Frank Griffith Dawson: "My book, THE FIRST LATIN AMERICAN DEBT CRISIS (Yale Univ. Press) covers a neglected but fascinating chapter in Anglo-Latin American relations, the disastrous 1822-25 investment boom. During this brief period, British investors lost $21 million in defaulted Latin American government bonds, devastating confidence in Latin America as an area for capital investment for a generation. Even today, Latin America owes its banking and other anxious international creditors over $400 billion, an amount unlikely to be repaid. Yale suggests the book to politicians, stockbrokers, bankers, and lawyers who are attempting to deal with the consequences of the latest lending boom."

Bruce Rosborough: "Was interested to learn that Lang Stevenson had given up international investment banking to teach history to sixth graders at Hackley, while unraveling the tangled financial affairs (the fouled nest?) of the Natl. Ace Baber was the speaker at the well-attended N.Y. Class dinner held on Apr. 16. Ace talked about his work as PLAYBOY's Men columnist, a column he began ten years ago and is still writing. Ace's column as well as his other works address issues such as gender and identity, sexuality, censorship, men and women, divorce and child custody, feminism, and its impact on our culture. His talk focused on what he saw as the need for a Men's Studies program at Princeton. He suggested that the University begin an experimental program in Gender Studies, concentrating on the idea that undergraduate education should be designed to further solidify a student's sense of personal identity—and that gender identity is at the heart of the matter. It is Ace's belief that young men today are in great need of a solid sense of male identity, and that the traditions of role-modeling and mentoring that used to support male life have mostly disappeared from our culture.

Preserving tales of the Old West, Dave Humphrey, senior archivist at the L.B.J. Library, has published "A Muddy and Conflicting View of the Civil War" in the SOUTHWESTERN HISTORICAL QUARTERLY. Focusing on another chapter of American history, Sarge Bush has co-authored a collection of early American women's autobiographical works under the title JOURNEYS IN NEW WORLDS (Univ. of Wisc. Press). Sarge, a professor of English at the Univ. of Wisconsin, has taken on additional duties as associate dean for humanities in the College of Letters and Science.

Cherry blossoms brought out more than tourists in Washington last April. Gathered for cocktails and camaraderie at your secretary's home were Aurbach, Cotter, Fisher, Foxworth, Heller, E. G. Lewis, Manishevitz, Matheson, Proctor, Robertson, Roche, and Siegel. It was a most pleasant evening for classmates and spouses.

Dick Leberman is on sabbatical from his Anchorage, Alaska, practice, spending the year at the Montreal Neurological Inst. of McGill Univ. as a research and clinical fellow. Dick's project is in the field of surgical treatment of epilepsy. Also in Montreal is Dave Angus, still practicing maritime law and, since June 1989, president of the Canadian Maritime Law Assn.

Dave keeps tabs on Alan Golden, also an attorney in Montreal, and to occupy his idle hours, keeps Brian Mulroney's Progressive Conservative Party solvent as its chief fundraiser. Dave somehow managed to slip away for some salmon fishing with John MacFarlane in Gaspé last July.

On the Griot Trail

MUSIC GRADUATE STUDENT ERIC CHARRY has a taste for the exotic. Last summer, Charry returned from West Africa, where he had spent two years studying the kora, a twenty-one stringed harp-lute made from a large gourd, and the balafon, a percussion instrument resembling the xylophone. In his travels, he studied with "griots," hereditary professional musicians who trace their roots back to the thirteenth century.

As Charry explains it, the tradition of West African griots began seven hundred years ago in a great struggle between Sumanguru Kante, an evil slave-owning king, and his rival, Sunjata Keita. Sumanguru possessed the original balafon, which had been given to mankind by a genie. When Sunjata defeated Sumanguru, he captured the balafon and gave it to his court musicians, the Kouyate family.

Griots, says Charry, "go by family names. Kouyate is the primary name for musicians among the Mandinko and Malinke. So, if your name is Kouyate, it goes without saying that your grandfathers go back to the thirteenth century. Their legends and their oral history say that. There are now five or six griot family names, but they all acknowledge Kouyate as the original royal musicians."

Djimo Kouyate, Charry's kora teacher, is a Senegalese living in Washington, D.C. Charry began studying with him after coming to Princeton to work with Professor Harold S. Powers. He already had a background in nonwestern music, having spent a year in India studying the sitar, following his undergraduate work at the New England Conservatory of Music.

During his stay in West Africa, Charry traveled with Kouyate and another griot mentor, named Jobate. "There is a kind of musicians' network in these countries," he says. "So, with Kouyate and Jobate, no matter what town we went to, I was accepted as a guest and made to feel at home."

Charry says his final African adventure, a trip to Guinea to see what is believed to be the original balafon, was the most exciting. The instrument is held under lock and key in a tiny village near the border of Guinea and Mali. To see it, Charry had to get permission from the national and local governments and, more importantly, win the trust of the village elders and the family who guard the sacred balafon.

Charry got to the village driving over roads that turned a fifty-mile trip from the regional capital into a ten-hour ordeal. The usually suspicious Kouyate elders were convinced of Charry's good intentions when he played balafon for them. "They could see that I had had contact with other musicians and was in their milieu," he says.

The original balafon is only played once a year, at the festival of Tabaski (or Id Al-Fatir), which follows Ramadan in the Islamic world. Charry was fortunate to be there at the right time, but, unfortunately, the oldest member of the family (who is the only one allowed to play the instrument) is blind and was unable to travel to the village that day. Charry did, however, view the original instrument, and was able to photograph and record a replica of it.

Charry's work in West Africa was supported by the Social Science Research Council and the Council on Regional Studies. He is now sharing the excitement of his research. He brought back four koras and seven balafons and is teaching other students to play these unique instruments. At a Princeton Today program last fall, several undergraduates performed with Charry before an alumni audience.

Many of this group attended the Alumni Day Class of 1960 dinner at Prospect, now an annual event for classmates and 1960 kids.

Meanwhile, Thomas Kebler writes: "I have moved to the south of Chile for a few years where I'm setting up a salmon hatchery and salt-water farm. I'm living on the shore of Lake Llanquihue, in the shadow of three snow-capped volcanoes, where the air is clean and the trout fishing is out of this world. All classmates are welcome." Tom's stateside address is 6161 Blue Lagoon Drive, #400, Miami, FL 33126.

A postcard from Marrakech, Morocco, says, "I have no idea if or where this will reach you, having entrusted it to a Berber Tribesman in a remote village in the Atlas Mountains, where I'm hiking. My 51-year-old knees are O.K., but I'm tiring of the diet of couscous and tajines. Hope to have some good stories for the 30th. Also hope the weekly mail mule gets this to Marrakech." All this from Bob Fuller.

"Last chance to take advantage of the fact that we are the first class since 1881 and maybe the last ever whose class numerals read the same upside down," wrote Steve Schaefer last fall. He urged consideration of that fact in our 30th reunion logo, and we have done our best—see above. Phil Ginsberg reports that Wick Dufford has joined his law firm, which is now Ginsberg, Stanich and Dufford ("Stanich" being Phil's wife Janice). Wick specializes in environmental law. Walt Petratis has returned to the classroom as an M.B.A. candidate at the Univ. of Arizona. The "From The Managing Editor" section of Feb. 11's TMS included a photo of Joe Ferrer, the new assistant managing editor of TMS Intl. With TMS since 1963, Joe is described as "one of the magazine's masters of editing." From Frank Towne: "In my 30th year of teaching at the Peddie School and am now the senior member of the faculty. I still love teaching."

A reminder from Class Agent Fred Hitz: LAST CALL FOR A.G. Princeton needs every dollar we can provide. If you haven't given yet, try to send a check before the June 30 deadline.

N.Y. CLASS DINNER: A very successful Class dinner was held at the Princeton Club of N.Y. on Mar. 5, 1991. "Spotted through the haze of cocktails and dinner" were classmates Sandy Achley, Drew Berry, Scott Brooks, Grant Brownrigg, Joe Callagtrone, Tony Eumtn, Nick Gallo, John Hoffmann, Joe Irenas, Ted Jacobs, Al Kaemmerlaen, Bob Koch, John Lands, Gordon Large, Mike Maibews, Bob Medina, Nick Nicholas, Sam Reiken, Mike Ridder, Mike Rosen, Bob Rosenfeld, John Sands, Terry Shultz, Dermod Sullivan, Bill Swain, Steve Telch, Russ Treyz, Bill Venable, Martin Weber, Ed Weibemayer and Taylor Woodward. Lindwood Davis could not make it from Winston-Salem, N.C., but Linwood Jr. '94 represented the Davis family. Class President Joe Irenas delivered a State of the Class address. Distinguished speaker for the evening was Honorary Classmate Malcolm Diamond, professor of religion, whose talk held the assemblage spellbound. Says Joe, "In simplest terms, his subject was the afterlife, something which seems closer and more real as we all pass our 50th year."

We are sorry to report, very belatedly, that John L. Isacs died Mar. 10, 1988. Should anyone have details, please contact the Class secretary soonest.

Last December this column commented in error that Howard Hamm was the class's only trade show manager. Not so. Will Little, Howard's former boss, is one of the top trade show executives in the country. Under Will's leadership as president, George Little Management, one of the oldest trade show management companies in the country has grown both in size and stature, one of only a few firms, according to TRADE SHOW WEEK, to have placed nine shows in the nations top 200 of 1990. Will and his wife, Helen, live in N.Y.C. with their two children, Thea (15) and Christopher (13). Howard, an independent consultant who also lives in N.Y.C., is former president of the Natl. Assn. of Exposition Managers.

Last July Hilton Smith became president and C.E.O. of Pacific Cities Inc., one of the largest real-estate property management firms operating in the Puget Sound area. He is still living on Mercer Island, Wash. with family, having endured a total remodel of his home. Charles Sivinsky is a professor of electrical engineering at Univ. of Missouri in Columbia.

You will notice in the May 15 PAW a fiery set of rebuttals to Professor Lawrence Stone's proposal to drop the senior thesis. One of the most eloquent is from Cornell history professor Steve Kaplan, a Ch-inne and Beaker whose own thesis on the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition of 1876 secured his position as history dept. wunderkinder. Steve, by the way, won't turn 50 'til Jan. 1993.

Warren Emley, still practicing otolaryngology in Concord, N.H., was recently elected president of the New Hampshire Medical Society, which celebrates its 200th anniversary this year. Mark Adelman is still a professor of anatomy at the UHUMS in Bethesda, Md. Ken Kruckmeyer continues as associate commissioner of Public Works in Boston.

The April mini-reunion in New Orleans, hosted so attentively by Susan and Rick Price, was declared Bill Walker, "a gastronomic, musical, and celebratory event of the first order!" High praise indeed from the man who has worked overtime to rally '64ers all over the globe. Among those on hand were Leewood Avery, Jimmy Haus and his friend Katherine, Nancy and Rich Intersimone, Gracie and Jo Johnson, Marty and Steve Johnson, Mary and Cb-eney Joseph, Mary Kay and Rob Kuser, Karen and Ed Murphy, Chuck Osborn, Grazina and Fred Pearson, Bill Purcell and his friend Elaine, DeeDee and Yan Ross, Barbara and Larry Singmaster, Dick Springs, Margot and Bill Walker, Pam and Dave Westberill, Judy and Jim Williamson and, of course, our hosts. New Orleans is quite a spot, and the mix of plantation visits, Dixieland, swamp tours, and meals at such storied establishments as Brennan's and Commander's Palace was just right. Susan and Rick did a great job!

Dix Moorhead reports that his San Marino (Calif.) H.S. chum Don Blacher died in a freakish car accident in Marin County on Apr. 14. Dix and Doug Chance attended the funeral service in San Francisco. A memorial will follow.

Bob Blondino has single-handedly changed the dress code of the Eastern Orthopedic Assn.'s annual meeting by blowing everyone away with his Reunions special Tiger Tux in Bermuda. Bob reports that the next meeting, in Madrid, specifies that there will be no formal dress function, striped or solid.

John Vogel, in his capacity as president of the Princeton Club of Washington, recently chaired a function for "The Princeton Family in Congress" which was addressed by President Shapiro and attended by, among other luminaries, Bill Bradley, Clem Dinsmore, Mike van Dusen, and, as council member at large, John Andrews.

George Christy recently joined the L.A. office of G.E. Capital's transportation and industrial funding group.

Steve Jordan was kind enough to send a note of thanks and regards to Paul Dykstra, Leon Osterweil, and Mike Parish, "who, along with many others, have helped me diplomatically through a stressful year while my wife has been ill." We will hope for the best and remember the many benefits of friendship.

Although Reunions are now history, the Annual Giving campaign extends through the end of June. If you haven't ponied up your contribution, please get it done. The University will appreciate it, the Class of 1966 will appreciate it, as will Nelson Hendler, our A.G. chairman. As of mid-April, our goal of $3.5 million was in sight, but only with the full participation of the Class.

In addition to running A.G., Nelson has been elected president of the Princeton Alumni Assn. of Maryland and appointed to the board of directors of Columbia Bancorp, a publicly-held company based in Columbia, Md. When not volunteering his time to the University, Nelson is on the staff of the Mensana Clinic, which he established in 1978. He has written extensively on the diagnosis and treatment of chronic pain and is an assistant professor at Johns Hopkins.

In April, Guy Flitch Lytle was appointed dean of the Univ. of the South's school of theology and became the 12th person to hold the position in Sewanee's history. Before taking the appointment and moving to Sewanee, Guy was professor of church history at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific (C.D.S.P.) and doctoral professor of history at the Graduate Theological Union (G.T.U.) in Berkeley. Since 1986, he has been associate rector of the Episcopal Church of St. John the Evangelist in San Francisco's Mission District, where he has ministered to those in the plight of the inner city.

Guy's unique combination of scholarship and service was apparently a significant factor in his selection for the post at Sewanee. In announcing Guy's appointment, Dr. Samuel Reunions. Williamson, president of the Univ. of the South, noted, "Guy Lytle brings academic success, respect among his peers in theological education, and tremendous energy to the position."

With sadness, we report the death of Stephen Koller in Mar. 1991. A memorial will be published in a subsequent issue of PAW.

Forty states quickly adopted the plan, accounting for over 80% of the national Medicaid business. Bob, who is executive director of national customers and policy for Merck, Sharp & Dohme, and wife, Dorothy (also with Merck), are kept busy on the home front by Alexander Winston (2½) and Jonathan Harry (8 mos.).

Mike Wyatt reports that our Class dinner in N.Y.C. was well attended. He also notes that there have been regular meetings in N.Y.C. to plan the 25th A.G. effort. "The group includes Bill Paternotte, Al Adler, Jim Edmondson, Bob Lem, Bob Grant, Sid Steirn, Reed Simmons, Bill King, and many others." Mike says that this year's A.G. drive is aiming for maximum participation ("irrespective of dollars").

More news from two generations of Princetonians:

Tanya Baranowski '92 provided this photo of her and dad, Tom Baranowski, to prove that he has indeed returned to Old Nassau at least once since graduation.

Ben Smith '94 says that Princeton has proved to be pretty much everything it was cracked up to be: exciting, stimulating, and beautiful. He splits his time between course work, playing tenor sax in the Jazz Ensemble, and creative writing. He's had some great teachers, but his father, Peter Smith, has taught him the importance of taking risks and of having the courage to put yourself on the line for things you believe in. For Ben, his dad exemplifies courage, devotion, and self-sacrifice through his work in education and politics. Ben also enjoys the running commentary of a nostalgic father as they walk the campus together.

Alex Reutter '94 also thinks that Princeton is a great place to be because of its atmosphere of openness and freedom to talk about one's concerns. Unlike his father, Dick Reutter, who majored in politics at Woody Woo (and later became a pediatrician), Alex has set his sights on being a math major, partly because of the quality of the math dept. at Princeton, partly because of Fine Hall, and partly because of his fondness for mathematics (and also perhaps partly because math majors don't write voluminous 200-page WAR AND PEACE-like monsters that politics majors must produce at the end of their senior year.)

John Loose says many things which cannot be printed in this column, but he also reminds all procrastinators to mail in your Annual (that means yearly) Giving checks by June 30. Before we had time to say "Pick Seventy," Steve Dawson left his post as acting director of the N.J. State Lottery to become V.P. for consumer marketing for Blue Cross/Blue Shield of N.J.

Charlie McCandlish is now president of the Friends of the Virginia State Arboretum, near Winchester, described as a "great place to walk and clear the head." Jack Smiley is now municipal court judge in Ventura, Calif., where he is sometimes responsible for the master calendar. His good daughter Mary Kate promises to apply to Princeton next year. After nearly a decade in Geneva, Paul Basile moved to London as marketing director for Computer Science Corp. to capture those reported big, new European markets.

Apropos Mickey Pobl's comical remarks at our Class dinner, Bob Kettering inquires "is there a statute of limitations on joke theft? Are you the plaintiff or a potential defendant, Bob?"

Perhaps we should put that question to the Honorable Patrick Woodward, who was recently appointed to the Montgomery Cty. Maryland District Court—the third generation of his family to sit on the bench.

Ken Weaver is someone who is making the world a better place—his assignment for M&Ms and Mars is to perfect their chocolate. Bet he takes his work home with him at nights. He also wonders how his two kids keep getting bigger, while he doesn't get any younger.

Pres. 'SOONS REUNION: When Princeton's oldest close harmony singing group, the Nassoons, held a 50th anniversary celebration Apr. 5-7 in Princeton, the Class of 1971 was well represented. Among the more than 150 singers present were Sandy McAdoo (who reported on the event), Chris Stifel ("making a rare Princeton appearance"), Chuck Goldberg ("whose tenor voice still bring tears to men's eyes and makes women swoon"), "Smookey" Bill Felch (whose dad, Bill Sr. '42 was one of the original 'Soons), and Scott Alexander. Of the Class of 1971 members, only Chris Wilson and Lt. Col. Jay Solits (en route from the Mid East, after leading some of the First Battalion, 11th Marines in support of the attack that took the airport at Kuwait City) were unable to attend. The weekend concluded appropriately with the assembled multitude of 'Soons in their accustomed spot in Blair Arch at midnight Saturday for a concert lasting into the wee hours of the morning. As is their custom, you can hear them at Reunions at midnight at Blair Arch on Friday, June 9.

VALEDICTORY: How could five years have gone by so quickly and so pleasantly? During my time as your Class secretary, many changes have taken place in all our lives. Your letters reported that many of us finally found our life's passion, while others chose to change paths toward new, more fulfilling goals. There have been many marriage and birth notices, and thankfully far fewer divorces and deaths. Children have grown, some have gone on to college (including five Princetonians so far), or have even started families of their own. The first of us are trying out that strange state of "retirement." I have been fortunate to witness some of this from a unique vantage point. Over 600 classmates have been mentioned in one or more of these 109 columns. But numbers alone do not begin to tell the story. What I will cherish most are the more introspective thoughts you shared on what the last 20 years have meant to you and where you think the Class of 1971 is going in the future. For me, the chance to pass along some of this news to you has been far more enjoyable than you can imagine. My thanks to all of you for making this possible. I hope you keep my successors as well stocked with developments on your lives in the years to come.

Helena Nouwakova McCauley and her husband, Brian, and their two children, Niki and Saali, managed to leave Kuwait before the Iraqi invasion. Later it was very difficult to learn about the tragic losses and dangers to the many friends and colleagues they left behind. Since July, Helena and Brian have been in Puerto Rico, where Brian is superintendent of a school system and Helena teaches.

Since graduation, Helena has lived on five continents. Besides teaching in California, Peru, Nicaragua, Spain, Kenya, and Kuwait, she and Brian have spent time in the Amazon jungle and the highlands of the Andes, traveling extensively in South America, and going through the terror of Somoza's fall in Nicaragua. Family vacations have included camping and going on safari in East Africa and climbing to the top of Mt. Kilimanjaro. Helena and Brian are now adding to a house they bought above the city of Ponce, and keeping busy with the many activities of their children.

Lorene Reano and James K. Abram had their second child, Jason Ryan, on Sept. 18, 1990. Jason's older brother, Russell, is ten. Lorene works for the Public Health Service, and Jim works for the State of New Mexico as an education consultant.

Walter and CoCe Turner Haydock gave Wally (5) and Lily (2) a new sister, Nina Bolet Haydock, on Feb. 3. The next day, Feb. 4, Liz Laporte and Carl Oshiro welcomed Catherine Laporte Oshiro. She is pictured with her sister, Allison.

Barbara and Robert Tidona became parents last

Nov. 5 with the birth of Amelia Novello Tidona. "Things haven't been the same since," Bob says, "and we're glad of that."

President Bush has appointed Dennis Yao, associate professor at Penn's Wharton School, to serve on the Federal Trade Commission. Denny specializes in industrial organization, a field that includes the antitrust and consumer protection issues the F.T.C. handles. He will succeed Andrew Strenio '74.

While lobbying on the Clean Air Act Amendments last year, Russell Prye noticed that one of the key E.P.A. spokesmen looked familiar. It wasn't until a P.C. of Washington function recently that he identified Rob Brenner, director of the Office of Policy Analysis and Review in the E.P.A.'s Office of Air and Radiation. That makes at least two classmates in E.P.A. management, he points out: Hank Habicht is the deputy administrator of the E.P.A.

We have received the sad news of the death of Julie Roper on Apr. 12. A memorial will follow. We have a memorial in this issue.

Mostly Magic, in Greenwich Village, is N.Y.'s only remaining club devoted to magic. A regular performer there is Peter Kougasian, whose childhood interest in magic was rekindled during his junior year at Princeton. Although he couldn't make the thesis requirement disappear, he honed his skills while studying law at Yale and is now a senior trial attorney in the Manhattan District Attorney's office. The N.Y. LAW JOURNAL (Apr. 9) featured Peter in a story on lawyers and judges whose hobby is magic and quoted his explanation of why he couldn't reveal the secret to any his tricks: "Magicians' ethics are stricter than even a lawyer's."

As residents of Tel Aviv, Sara Beck, her husband, and three children weathered 17 Scud missile attacks and three false alarms during the Gulf War. They've now put away their gas masks, and Sara and Ben are back to work teaching at Tel Aviv Univ.

Pictured is Steve Dufack at the entrance to the Paw Paw tunnel on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal. The canal's towpath stretches from Washington, D.C. to Cumberland, Md. and is a popular bike route. Steve did the roundtrip—365 miles—in the week between leaving his job as director of communications at the Worldwatch Inst. and becoming the editor of ENVIRONMENTAL FORUM, published by the Environmental Law Institute for professionals in environmental law and policy. Steve continues to live in Washington and is working at his new job with Barry Breen '78 and Rob Fischman '84.

BONANZA—The University's Annual Giving records-keepers report that '77 leads all pre-15th reunion classes in average gift per person: $146. And, under the stewardship of Class Agent Jamie Reed, '77 ranked second in total contributions, behind the Class of 1983, with $46,064 as of Apr. 8. Remember, the University's fiscal year—and our chance to beat '83—ends June 30.

THIRTYSOMETHING—Actor Mark Nelson was seen on the ABC-TV series "thirtysomething" as a junior high-era classmate of Melissa's named Leonard, who, all grown up and trained as a physicist, put in an appearance at Melissa's first gallery show. TV GUIDE said it was "an exhibition of her inhibitions about men." Mark was not the only Princetonian who had something to do with that episode: the executive story editor of "thirtysomething" is Winnie Holzman '76. Mark also appeared at McCarter Theater in Princeton last month in THE FILM SOCIETY by John Robin Baitz, about a boys' prep school in South Africa in the 1970s.

GENERATIONS—Thomas Fenner Gibson Jr. '42 reports that Thomas Fenner Gibson III and his wife, Kim, became parents with the birth of Thomas Fenner Gibson IV last Nov. 2. "If we're going to have a Sun King dynasty in this family," Tom says, "we'll have to keep going 'til we reach XIV or whatever Louis was." Fenner, as the newest Gibson is known, not only has a '77er for a father, he has one for a godfather, Tom Lotterman.

THE ADVOCATES—Hank Howarth became a partner at Buchanan Ingersoll in Pittsburgh and is serving as president of the local school board. John Speers became a partner at Salans Hertzfeld & Heilbronn in Paris. He continues his work on Eastern European matters and represents American companies in France. Ron Stack left law practice to become a film and video director. He opened a company to make training and marketing films for law and accounting firms, and is writing a screenplay. Next stop, L.A.?

Annie Rikleen Bachman's second daughter, Emily Kay, was born Mar. 1, 1991. She joins her sister, Rebecca, who was born July 1, 1989. Annie and husband, John, both work for Cadbury Schweppes in Trumbull, Conn. The Bachman household is located in Weston, Conn.

It's hard to tell what's going through the mind of Grant Linder (born Nov. 8, 1990), but Philip Linder (3) is clearly thrilled to have a baby brother. They are the sons of Cathy and Rolf Linder, who is now employed in the direct marketing business at M.B.I., Inc., in Norwalk, Conn. Rolf writes that they "love being a family of four!"

Susan and Michael V. McKay are the parents of a healthy and happy little boy. Michael Thomas, their first child, was born Nov. 16, 1990.

Annamarie and Mark Mercurio (25 Flat Rock Hill Rd., Old Lyme, CT 06371) welcomed their third child on Nov. 23, 1990. Robert joins sisters Lisa (6) and Julie (3). Mark writes, "We're all healthy and doing well, and very much enjoy hearing from old friends."

Meg Monroe Zellinger gave birth to her second child, Jessica, in Dec. 1989. Meg writes, "She's a real charmer, as is her brother, L.C. (3)." Meg left the state hospital in Feb. 1990, and has since been working for the V.A. hospital in Maine, "primarily doing neuropsychological evaluations. A welcome change, and I'm learning a lot."

U.S. MOVES: Sally Apgar has moved from Boston to Minneapolis, where she is a business and financial reporter for the Minneapolis STAR TRIBUNE. Linda Gall has moved from New York to Boston and would love to hear from any Princetonians in the area. Philip Hamburger has moved from Connecticut to Washington, D.C., where he is studying American constitutional history; next year, he will be teaching at the George Washington Univ. law school.

FROM THE AIRWAVES: After almost 17 years of interviews, the syndicated radio show "American Focus," (called "Focus on Youth" while we were in college) has stopped production. Garth Ancier began the show as a Lawrenceville School junior, and it kept growing until its recent loss of advertising revenue. Garth continues to thrive, however, as president of network television production at Walt Disney Studios.

(son of Terry and Robin), Rachel Johnson (daughter of Michael and Diane), Allison Deeban (daughter of Alan and Sally), and Jill and David Froimson (daughter and son of Mark and Kim).

James Brock writes that his son Kenneth has convincingly shown that he is, indeed, a chip off the old Brock. David Chess's daughter, Mayanne Gael, was born Aug. 16, 1990. Jan Denise Loughbran writes that she and Chris '79 are thrilled with their first child, Rory DeNyse, a son, born Oct. 21, 1990. Marshall Wallace had his annual stickball reunion with Bernie "Biff" Blais and John Murray at Henry-Laughlin Memorial Field. Bernie just had a second child, Benjamin Wally. John now has two children, Josh and Ben. Jan Devereux and George Lloyd are still living in Paris. Daughter Cecily was born on Nov. 12, 1990. She joins Graham, now almost three, who is a regular member of the sandbox set in the Luxembourg Gardens. Ellen Lubell is working part-time as in-house counsel at the Univ. of Mass. Med. Ctr. Ellen has two boys, Josh (3) and Ben (1½).

EAST COAST: This bowl of delight is Eliza Gomez, daughter of Carla Armbrust Gomez and Julio Gomez '82. Eliza was born on Apr. 15, 1990, Easter and tax day. Carla, Julio, and Eliza live in Concord, Mass. John Ryan finally finished his Ph.D. in physics at M.I.T. and has taken a one-to-two-year postdoctoral associateship there. He is enjoying Boston. Michael Chin and Akiro Shimamura will graduate from Univ. of Rochester this May. Both will receive M.D./Ph.D. degrees. They will then begin internships at Johns Hopkins, he in internal medicine and she in pediatrics.

WEST COAST: Michelle Beeman is relocating from Seattle, where she has been clerking for U.S. Chief District Court Judge Barbara Rothstein. They had the first flag-burning case last year. Michelle is moving to Minneapolis, where she will clerk for Judge Jack Davies of the Minnesota Court of Appeals. Paul Quintas and his wife, Bethia, spent a week skiing in Aspen this winter. Now Paul is finishing his Ph.D. and sifting through job interviews.

ALL AROUND THE TOWN: Deborah Krohn is living in Florence and finishing a Ph.D. in Art History from Harvard. She hopes to return to the States within the year to start teaching. Jane Shumate has spent the past two years working as a writer and now plans to travel in Italy until the fall when she will start Columbia's creative writing program. Tony Kleckner and his wife, Tania, live in London, where he works for Morgan Stanley.

Tim McGinty has been battling AIDS for the past four years. He is an active speaker on AIDS education through the Hetrick-Martin Inst. and serves as an officer in Dignity. Tim lives in N.Y.C. and is associated with the law firm of Christy & Viener.

LETTER FROM LONDON . . . Shelagh Taber Walsb sends this photograph of her son James Geoffrey, born Nov. 7, 1990. Shelagh writes that she, husband Colin, and Jamie (named after Shelagh's brother Geoff '82) enjoy life across the pond, but that, "It's been a long time since I've been back to Reunions; it's a long trip from the U.K.!"

MORE DUES NEWS . . . Also in London is Alison Graham, who is in her second year of theater studies at the Central School. Just back in the U.S. of A. is John Lowry, who spent the last six months on active duty in the Persian Gulf participating in Operation Desert Shield/Storm. John is heading to Quantico, Va. this fall to attend the Amphibious Warfare School. The Class extends a warm Welcome Back to John on his safe return from the Middle East.

CONGRATULATIONS ARE IN ORDER TO . . . Stuart Schulman on his marriage to Susan Waters '85. The couple was married last August, and live in San Francisco, where Stuart is with Buck Consultants. Art Moody '33 dropped us a line to say, "I recently saw a play at St. Mark's Episcopal Church on Capitol Hill, D.C., in which two of your classmates, Emily Guthrie and Louis Bayard, played major roles and played them brilliantly. The St. Mark's Players have been operating for a number of years and do a really professional job. The church is a very lively place."

Emily played the role of Emily Webb and Louis played George Gibbs in Thornton Wilder's Our Town. Their bios read like this:

Emily Guthrie (Emily Webb): Emily is sure she was cast in this part because she would always respond when her name was called. Emily wears more than one hat around St. Mark's. Most often she is known as the parish program coordinator. She has acted in musical comedies since high school, but this is her first attempt at serious drama. This is her second St. Mark's performance; she played Madam Doro in HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSON.

Louis Bayard (George Gibbs): Louis is appearing in his second St. Mark's production, having already sung the glories of Copenhagen in HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSON. This is also the latest of many co-starring engagements with Emily Guthrie; the two of them are fast becoming the Lunt and Fontanne (or the Lawrence and Gorme) of the St. Mark's Players. Louis is also a member of St. Mark's Church.

Bravo Emily and Louis, and thanks, Mr. Moody, for the scouting report.

DRIVER'S SEAT: This long-overdue photo was sent in last November by Jim Adams '61, who gave his daughter Lisa Adams a special license plate. And what does Jim Adams have on his license plate? "Tiger 61" ... of course.

THANKS: Rabul Asthana writes, "Raghu Rangarajan, who is presently a graduate student in the dept. of physics at U.C.—Santa Barbara, sustained serious injuries in a small plane crash in Santa Barbara last October. He is recovering now and would like to express in the PAW class notes his thanks to all the members of the Class who gave him their support during his difficult period."

LETTER OF THE MONTH: Albert Gayle writes, "I am currently working as a paralegal for the law firm of Bruggeman, Smith & Peckham in Los Angeles. I have spent the past six months searching for my biological parents. I found my mom, my dad, and two sisters. It has been a rewarding and emotionally exhausting experience. My life will never be the same."

GOODBYE: This Class notes column will be my last of the year. The column for the Reunions issue (July 10) will be guest-written by Class Bill Bowman. GON' TO THE ... Nguyet Le-Lindquist has sent in word of her marriage to Ulf Lindquist '88 on July 1, 1989. Classmates in attendance included Bruce Cohen, Geni Gilman, Dai Ly, Terri McCart, Tom Padula, Jennifer Gillen Scacbert, Kate Smith, and Marian Stover. Nguyet is a second-year med student at U.C.L.A., where John McPherson is also practicing to practice medicine. Ulf, who was a physics grad student at Princeton, works at the NASA Jet Propulsion Lab. They are enjoying California immensely and intend to settle there for good.

... CHAPEL ... Looking mahvelous in their wedding duds are Ronald Lamb and his bride Kristi (Michigan State Univ. '88), on Oct. 20, 1990, in Grand Blanc, Mich. Sharing the moment with Ron and Kristi are (l-r) Lisa Nalchallian '91, David Littell, Steve Consentino, Al Scott, John Connolly, and Paul Robertson '87. Oh, and the fellow kneeling before his betters is a Cornell grad.

... GONNA GET MARRIED ... From Boston we hear the good news that Kristen De Poy is engaged to Bart Blaesser '90. Kristen is studying international business law at B.U., while Bart is in his first year of dental medicine at Harvard. They plan to be married in the Princeton Chapel sometime in 1992, after Kristen graduates.

GETTING MARRIED ... Not! Eric Simonoff has left W.W. Norton to take a job as a literary agent with Janklow & Nesbit Associates, and is living in Brooklyn, "the borough of my ancestry." Damn literary types.

The end of the fiscal year for the class of '89 is approaching. That means time is running out for us to clear our consciences and our accounts with Class dues and Annual Giving. That's a hint, son.

Here's a photo of four classmates who spent the school year—and the war—studying in Israel. Brad Hames, Michael Freund, Dan Feigelson, and Seib Young are pictured in the Judean Desert, where they are breathing a bit easier now that the threat of SCUD attacks has passed.

Keeping in an international frame of mind, Noah Steinberg studies in Vienna and works in Budapest with friends who have set up an import/export firm with offices in Prague, Sofia, Vilnius, Moscow, and N.Y.C. In addition, John Lewis has returned to the States after five months of teaching in Johannesburg, and Lisa Radnousky studies English at Duke but will travel to Athens for the next 12 months. She's looking for fellow Princetonians who know the lay of the land in Greece.

REUNIONS REPORT: Hip, hip, tiger, tiger, tiger, sis, sis, sis, boom, boom, boom, bah—'90, '90, '90! Now that our first is behind us, here's to many, many more. Reunions surely offered the grad students in the Class a well-earned change of pace. Those who are slaving away at Penn: Mike Consuelos, Tiffany Ho, David Naibam, Mary Ott, Nandini Thillairajab, and Jim Whitfill are in med school, Mamta Khandedwal is in a post-grad pre-med program, Manny Alvarado, Tara Harper, Gary Ignatini, Livingston Johnson, and Noah Silverman are in law school, while Michele Kreisler is at Wharton. Debbie Edberg and Drew Denker are at nearby Jefferson Med.

Lot of odds and ends to tie up! On a high note, Mike Kotin was re-elected as our Class president for the coming year, while Doris Lee was elected V.P. Britt Fair was elected secretary-treasurer. Although Britt ran unopposed, a write-in campaign for Brad Reed, the idea of his clever roommates, almost toppled the favorite.

On a more somber note, on Apr. 26 our Class planted a tree on Chancellor Green to commemorate the death of Austin Nabm, who was killed on his Outdoor Action trip in the fall of 1989. It is good to see that he will always be remembered by the Class.

The winners of the Martin A. Dale '53 Awards are: Brua Davison, Alexis Done, Hyo-Sung Jane Park, David Tobin, Zabrua Velfi, Karen Demers, Scott Sonneborn, Ron Strauss, Tracy Munza, Rich Rusczyk, and Mike Fader. These students have been awarded $3,000 each to do something good for the world this summer. Proposed projects range from writing poetry in Kenya to building playgrounds. On behalf of the Class, I'd like to thank all those who have offered financial support such as the Dale awards to the Class of '93. Put simply, we could not have made it through the first half of our Princeton years without your help.

GEOLOGY: Hugh Greenwood '63, when last heard from, was aboard his sailboat with wife, Sylvia, somewhere in the Sea of Cortez or Caribbean Sea. He's normally in Vancouver.

MUSIC: Philip Gossett '70, dean of humanities and distinguished service professor of music at the Univ. of Chicago, delivered three lectures for the Christian Gauss Seminars in Criticism at Princeton this February. His lectures analyzed the problems that arise in performing the operas of such composers as Donizetti, Rossini, and Verdi. The Gauss Seminars are described as "a forum and testing-ground for ideas already clearly defined, but not yet having received their definitive formulation." Past lecturers include Kingsley Amis, Hannah Arendt, Noam Chomsky, Umberto Eco, and Erik Erikson.

PSYCHOLOGY: Kenneth M. Goldstein '64 is deputy director of the Staten Island Mental Health Society, a multi-service children's agency. His past activities include teaching at Queens College, C.U.N.Y.; appointment to the N.Y. State Board for Psychology; and president of the Richmond County Psychological Assn. Howard Wainer '68 recently published COMPUTERIZED ADAPTIVE TESTING (Erlbaum, 1990). He won the E.T.S. Senior Scientist Award (1990-92), was appointed the Schonbrunn visiting professor at the Hebrew Univ. for 1991-92, and delivered the keynote address for Division D of the American Educational Research Assn. in Apr. 1991 and at the Hawaiian Educational Research Assn. in Jan. 1991.

RELIGION: F. Ellen Weaver '73 is retiring from her teaching and post as asst. chair of the department of theology at the Univ. of Notre Dame. Her husband, prof. emeritus Jean Laporte, and she are moving to 48, rue des Meuniers, 75012 Paris, France. There she plans to continue research and writing.

STATISTICS: James J. Pilliben '69 reports that as part of his duties at the Natl. Inst. of Standards & Technology, he has just released updated versions of "Dataplot," an interactive statistical graphics/analysis software system. Dataplot previously ran on all major mainframes and minis, and now also runs on Suns, Iris's, & PC/386's. For details, he invites a call at 301-975-2855.

ARCHITECTURE: Jeffrey Ng '76 reports that he is a project architect with the firm of Ehrenkrantz, Eckstut & Whitelaw in N.Y.C. He and his wife, Winnie (currently an assistant professor of computer science at the Univ. of Southern Connecticut), as well as their son Thaddeus live in Fairfield, Conn.

CHEMISTRY: David Allred '77 has been associate professor of physics at Brigham Young Univ. since Aug. 1987. His current research focuses on thin films and Raman spectroscopy. Prior to that he had been a group leader at Energy Conversion Devices. Jim Dill '76 reports "total enjoyment" in his new career as a one-man software company in Eugene, Oreg. From St. Louis, Mo., comes news that Arthur Henn '82 married Brenda Muff in July 1990.

CIVIL ENGINEERING: Cheryl Blain '89 is pursuing her Ph.D. in civil engineering at the Univ. of Notre Dame. Another graduate Princetonian who has gone out on his own in the business world is John Taber '77, who formed Valley Engineering Group (a traffic and transportation engineering firm) in Bethlehem, Penn. John is also an adjunct professor of civil engineering at Lehigh Univ. Ron Wakefield '87 writes from Australia that he was married in 1989 and is currently lecturing in civil engineering at the Univ. of New South Wales.

COMPUTER SCIENCE: Peter Belina '88 writes that he has "traded NEWSWEEK for THE ECONOMIST" as part of his job as manager of distributed system security for Salomon Brothers in N.Y. He adds that he has also maintained his interest in unorthodox music, road trips, and hiking escapades.

ECONOMICS: Katbryn Yaeger Grabill '78 is currently working as a consulting system engineer and V.P. at the Bank of America. Her daughter Carolyn was two in February.

GERMANIC LANGUAGES AND LITERATURES: Father Mark Thamer '86 is associate professor of German and director of the honors program at Saint John's Univ. and the College of St. Benedict, Collegeville, Minn.

HISTORY: John W. Tyler '80 was recently appointed editor of publications at the Colonial Society of Massachusetts.

SOCIOLOGY: Since the birth of her daughter Hannah in 1989, Susan Chizeck '75 has taken a break from full-time teaching of medical sociology and is now splitting her time between child rearing and directing the student internship program at the Univ. of Texas at Dallas. She adds that she is enjoying the flexibility of both working and raising children. Thomas T. Kane '84 is currently a Rockefeller Population Research Fellow at CERPOD, Institut du Sahel in Bamako, Mali. Prior to this interesting post he was program officer and research associate for the committee on contraceptive development at the Natl. Academy of Sciences, Washington D.C.

WOODROW WILSON SCHOOL: Tyler K. B. Clinch '87 and David S. Clark '86 are happily settled in Colorado Springs, Colo. Tyler reports that she "has a terrific job" as a consultant for a public-policy/management consulting firm in Denver which allows her to spend time with their son Colton (1). Dave is operations officer for the 3/68 Armored Battalion at Ft. Carson.

The PRINCETON ALUMNI WEEKLY

194 Nassau St., Princeton, NJ 08542.

John Hewlett Fawcett '21

JOHN HEWLETT FAWCETT, a longtime resident of Berkeley, Calif., died Oct. 16, 1990, at the age of 91. He prepared for college at Donaldson School, where he was on the football and track teams. At Princeton he roomed alone in Edwards, Reunion and Hamilton Halls. He was V.P. of the St. Pauls Society and a member of Clio Hall.

After trying out a few fields he settled for a career in education. He received an M.A. from the Univ. of Washington and a Ph.D. from the Univ. of California, where he taught romance languages for many years.

As a loyal and hard-working alumnus, he was, at one time, on the Reunion Committee, the Class Council, and chairman of District XII. He had been secretary of the Princeton Club of Seattle and of San Francisco.

He is survived by his widow, Helen; a daughter Grace; a son John C.; and four grandchildren. To them all the Class extends sincere sympathy.

Hugh David Carter Jr. '25

HUGH CARTER was born in Atlanta Mar. 10, 1902, and died there Mar. 13, 1991. He transferred to our Class in 1923 from Georgia Tech, where he had obtained a B.S. degree. He immediately became a popular and respected member. He graduated with honors in economics and was a member of Charter and the Class Memorial Committee. He was a regional V.P. of the Class and a member of several Reunion Committees.

After graduation he joined Courts and Co., investment brokers, which was later merged with Dean Witter Reynolds, of which he was a resident partner until his retirement in 1990. He was a member of the Natl. Security Dealers Assn., a governor of the American Stock Exchange, a member of the Piedmont Driving Club, the Capital City Club, the Commerce Club, the Peachtree Golf Club, and the board of directors of the Georgia Y.M.C.A.

He was married to Ruth Moore in 1929 and is survived by a son, Dr. Jack Carter, and four grandchildren.

Stephen Campbell Cleaves '25

IN THE DEATH OF Steve Cleaves Mar. 18, 1991, the Class has lost another of its outstanding members. He was born in Oil City, Penn., June 15, 1902, attended Peddie and transferred to us from Allegheny College. He was a brother of Jack Cleaves, right halfback on the championship 1922 team. Steve was on the freshman and varsity basketball teams and was captain of the team that senior year won 21 games and lost two by a total of three points and was champion of the Eastern Collegiate, forerunner of the Ivy League. He also was on the lacrosse team and president of Elm Club.

Graduating from Harvard Law in 1928 he practiced law for 59 years, retiring from Littleton, Miller and Cleaves in 1988. He was a member of the N.Y. and N.J. Bar assns., the Down Town Club of N.Y., and of the Board of Education of Essex Fells, N.J., where he lived for many years. In WWII he served as a Lt. commander in the Pacific.

He served on the Class Executive Committee and drafted the Class Constitution in 1947.

He married Alice Schoonover in 1929 and is survived by her, a son Steve Jr. '59, a daughter Alice Lewis, six grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

DICK MARTIN was born in Muskogee, Okla., Sept. 4, 1902, and died there Mar. 10, 1990.

After graduating from Shattuck Military School, he came to Princeton and was a member of Gateway. He went on to the Univ. of Oklahoma Law School, returning to his hometown to become a prominent attorney. He was a past president of the Muskogee Bar Assn. and of the Chamber of Commerce, served on the state Board of Education, and was chairman of the local Gas Rationing Board during WWII. He also owned and operated a cattle ranch. He was a member of St. Paul United Methodist Church.

The Class extends sympathy to his widow, Golda, and his daughters Jane Sander and Diana Butler, who survive him.

Russell Archibald Ramsey '25

RUSS RAMSEY WAS BORN in Sandusky, Ohio, Mar. 11, 1904. He was president of his class at Howe Military Academy. At Princeton he was on the polo team, a captain in R.O.T.C., and a member of Court Club. Obtaining his law degree at Michigan, he practiced in Sandusky. He was a president of the Erie County Bar Assn., a director of the Western Security Bank, a trustee of Howe Military Academy, senior warden of Grace Episcopal Church and of the governing board of the Diocese of Ohio, and president of the Good Samaritan Hospital.

A captain in the Ohio Natl. Guard, he was mobilized in Oct. 1940. He spent 42 of the next 62 months in the Pacific, and was awarded numerous decorations for valor. He retired as a colonel. Upon demobilization, he was appointed a brigadier and, later, major general in command of the third Infantry division of the Army Reserve, with headquarters in Cleveland.

He married Louise Wilcox in 1929. They retired in Gainesville, Fla., in 1974. He died in Albany, Ga., Feb. 20, 1991. He is survived by his son, Russell of Albany, Ga., a daughter, Florence Waldoock, 12 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Nathan I. Moyse '26

NATE MOYSE, active member of the Class, although in apparent good health, died suddenly at his home in Toms River, N.J., Feb. 28, 1991. At Princeton Nate was on the track squad, sang in the Glee Club and Chapel Choir, was manager of the combined musical clubs, belonged to Court Club, and majored in geology. He went to Oklahoma after graduation and was associated with the petroleum industry and had other business interests. He was a leader in civic affairs in Tulsa. Among other activities he served the Red Cross and was a president of the Princeton Club of Tulsa. Nate and his family returned to the East in 1961 after nine years in Memphis, where he was in sales management.

Nate had looked forward to our 65th reunion and shortly before his death had volunteered his services as a pianist playing "the old songs." We will miss Nate and his supportive, cheerful ways.

In 1927 Nate married Eleanor Jacquith, who died in 1988. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. John Kozak and Mrs. Robert Marko, a son, William Moyse '66, six grandchildren (including Jennifer Moyse '94) and three great-grandchildren, to all of whom we extend our deep sympathy.

Henry J. Butler '27

"HANK" DIED Feb. 23, 1991, after a stroke, at the Barnes Hospital in St. Louis. For many years he was president of Butler, Kohaus, Inc., maker of electric lighting fixtures. He gave the building to St. Louis Univ. when he retired. He was a director of Bruce Terminix Inc. of St. Louis. During WWII, Hank operated a plant making parts for armor-piercing and fragmentation bombs, and served in the Missouri State Guard.

He became a devoted club man, and was dedicated to public service, particularly as Federal jury commissioner for Missouri (1953-73). Off duty Hank was a flower gardener, golfer, freshwater fisherman, hunter, tennis buff, cruiser, church trustee, and devoted Princeton reunioner.

Hank was one of our notable family chiefs, father of four daughters, frankly admitting "can't remember the names of all my grandkids."

We sympathize with his widow (4642 Pershing Place, St. Louis, MO 63108), and his daughters: Beatrice Toberman, Anne Muckerman, Martha von Guggenberg, and Judith Fohlers. Memorial gifts may be sent to Outreach Ministry, Church of St. Michael and St. George, P.O. Box 11887, Clayton, MO 63105.

Robert Easton Royes '28

BOB ROYES DIED Feb. 19, 1991, in Ashbrook Nursing Home in Scotch Plains, N.J. He had never recovered completely from injuries suffered in Apr. 1981 in an automobile accident which took the life of his wife, Peggy. Bob graduated from South Orange High School and at Princeton majored in history and was a member of Gateway Club. He studied law at Fordham.

Bob spent his entire business career with the N.Y. Telephone Co., chiefly in the area of employee benefits. He was related to A.T.&T. also, and retired in 1971.

He was active in numerous civic and charitable activities in the Plainfield area and was on the boards of the United Way and the United Family and Children's Society and a member of the Plainfield Country Club.

Bob and Margaret Fort were married June 9, 1933. They had two children, Robert Jr. '56 and Helen Royes Collins; four grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren. A cousin of Margaret's and usher in their wedding, was the late Franklin Ryan Fort '28. A nephew is John F. Fort '63. Bob was active in Princeton affairs and served as treasurer of the Class and chairman of off-year reunions. Bob was an unusually likable person and is remembered as a much-admired friend by his classmates. The sympathy of the Class is with his children and their families.

Frederick Wyatt Graves '30

WE KNEW HIM as Freddie, later, at least intra-family, he answered to Ted. His death arrived suddenly via cardiac arrest en route to the hospital in McAllen, Tex., Dec. 24, 1990, just 12 years to the day after the death of his wife, Kathryn, whom he married in 1933. His son, Fred W. III, lives in Houston, Tex., and his daughter, Chula Graves Jessup, is in Aurora, Ont., Can., near where Freddie had a home for summertime fishing.

At Princeton he belonged to Terrace Club, was active on the PRINCETONIAN and FRESHMAN HERALD boards, was president of Whig, and did publicity for the Triangle Club. He roomed with Dick Powell.

After Princeton Freddie heard the call to "Go west, young man," left Memphis, Tenn., and soon became involved in the food industry in Texas with the Food Center, Inc. and the canneries in Jacksonville. At our 25th, he admitted he was a typical Texan, in that he had a variety of investments (including oil) and held directorships in seven commercial and two charitable organizations. McAllen, Tex., is close to Mexico and Freddie spent much time below the border. The Class extends its sympathy to his son and daughter.

Philip Martin Ham '30 '31

PHIL DIED after a long illness Jan. 24, 1991, in the Winthrop Manor Nursing Home in Rome, Ga. He came to the Class via the Moses Brown School in Exeter, and at Princeton spent several years on the 150-pound crew squad, belonged to Charter Club, and graduated Phi Beta Kappa. He majored in French and, with an early decision to engage in teaching, returned to Princeton to earn his M.A. in 1931. Phil then taught and studied at Brown Univ. for three years, before going to Phillips Academy at Exeter, where he taught for ten years.

WWII and the U.S. Army then put him in uniform and he served for two years. After discharge, Phil moved to Rome, Ga., where he taught for 29 years until retirement in 1974 from the Darlington School.

Phil and Dorothy Key, who survives, were married promptly after graduation, on June 23, 1930, and they celebrated their 60th anniversary just a few days after our 60th reunion at the Nassau Inn. Their son, James Livingston Ham, and his several daughters are the only other survivors. Mason L. Ham '25 and John C. Ham '28, both deceased, were Phil's brothers. The Class sends our sincere condolences to these family members.

Casper Forman Hegner '30 '33

CAP DIED OF cancer Jan. 27, 1991, at his home in Westcliffe, Colo. Although born in Cincinnati, he spent much of his life in Denver, Colo., and came to Princeton via East High School, Denver. He is remembered as the captain of the Fencing Team, being active on the Tiger Board and the BUC-A-BUC, and as a member of Whig Hall and Colonial Club. He earned a B.F.A. degree from Yale in 1932, a M.F.A.A. at Princeton in 1933, and attended the Ecole de Beaux Arts, Fontainebleau, France. Depression years he sold soap for Proctor & Gamble, had a job with the Bureau of Reclamation in Denver, and worked for various architects until joining the Marine Corps in 1942. He saw service in Okinawa, was recalled during Korea, and attained the rank of Lt. colonel.

Cap helped form the firm of Smith, Hegner, and Moore. He then moved to Washington in 1962 to serve as director of architectural services for the Veterans' Administration until 1980.

Casper married Nancy Lee in 1935. They had three sons, C. Frank II '58, A. A. Lee '61, and Christopher, who died in 1980. There are five grandchildren. Nancy died in 1981, and Casper later married Velda Menzel in 1990, in time to join us at our 60th reunion. Cap's enthusiastic loyalty to Princeton had a touch of religious zeal about it and we sympathize deeply with the many who will miss him.

William Robbins Ridington '30 '31

BILL DIED Dec. 18, 1990, in a nursing home in Belfast, Me., near the home of his daughter, Jean. At Princeton he was active in various student employment ventures, was on the Rifle Squad, played trombone in the band, and roomed four years with Archibald Rutledge.

His career was in teaching classics and he added degrees (A.M., Princeton, 1931; Ph.D., Pennsylvania, 1935) plus additional studies in classical archaeology around the world: Middlebury College; American School of Classical Studies, Athens, Greece; Columbia Univ.; Virgilian Society of America, Cumae, Italy; Univ. of Birmingham, England; Aegean Institute, Poros, Greece. Bill taught at Dickinson Junior College (now Lycoming College) from 1935 to 1938 and then moved to Western Maryland College, Westminster, Md., where he remained to retirement in 1973 and beyond. The Ridingtons were familiar figures on the campus during the 1970s and 1980s.

Bill married Edith Parr, who survives and is living with their daughter, Candace, in Birmingham, Ala. Other survivors include a son, William Robbins Jr., and daughters, Jean Goldfine and Joy Boyce. There are five grandchildren and one great-grandchild. To all of these we extend our deep sympathy.

A. George Bixler Jr. '31

WE HAVE RECEIVED the sad news that George Bixler died Feb. 19, 1991, after a year-long struggle with cancer. He was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., but came to us from, and lived most of his life in, New Rochelle, N.Y., where for many years he was an active citizen. At New Rochelle High School, he was baseball manager and chairman of the Student Day Committee. At Princeton he roomed with Harmon Brown and Jack Bogert. During WWII Bix served in the Pacific and for more than five years was in the anti-aircraft branch of the U.S. Army. Both before and after the war he was in the real estate business. Bix retired 22 years ago. He enjoyed golf, gardening, and fishing, and in the summer would from time to time vacation in Maine or the Poconos. He is survived by his wife of 38 years, Frances; by two children, Nancy McGaughan and Albert G. Bixler III; and three grandchildren. To his family, the Class extends its deepest sympathy.

The Class of 1931

Archer B. Laurence '31

ON CHRISTMAS, WE LOST another classmate. Archer Laurence died Dec. 25, 1990, in his 83rd year, after a long and courageous struggle with cancer. He was a member of the large contingent of classmates who joined us from the Hun School. His wife, Sally, predeceased him. They had no children. For many years Arch lived in the Countryside section of Summit, N.J., where he had been active in local affairs; among other positions, he had been president of the Countryside Civic Assn., commander of the Civil Defense organization, and a member of the Planning Board and Urban Renewal Commission. Before he retired, he was president of the Laurence Belting Co. in N.Y. and treasurer of the Natl. Industrial Leather Assn. Arch was active in Princeton's Annual Giving campaigns. He was a loyal classmate; but to his great grief and frustration, his protracted and serious illness prevented him from attending our recent reunions. We mourn the loss of this fine citizen, warm friend, and loyal Princetonian.

Parker Leimbach '31

PARKER LEIMBACH died Feb. 27, 1990. He came to us from Baltimore, Md. Leim, as he was known to his many friends and classmates, was part of the large and versatile group to join us from Gilman School, where he was active in publications, tennis, and basketball. Born in Baltimore, he lived there, except for a period in Florida, during his working life. He was secretary and treasurer of the Baltimore Refrigeration Supply Co. and sold air conditioning equipment as well as refrigeration supplies. He retired in 1976. During Caribbean winter vacations, he enjoyed cruising. In the fall, he would vacation in Ocean City, Md. Leim was a member of Court Club and roomed with Henry Schaefer. He will be remembered as a congenial and affable classmate. We shall miss him and mourn his loss.

All our sympathies go to Leim's family. We have lost a good friend.

Charles J. Lipscomb '31

THE CLASS HAS RECENTLY LEARNED of the passing of Charlie Lipscomb July 29, 1990. Charlie was one of the group who came to us from Gilman. During freshman and sophomore years he roomed at 19 Univ. Place; the second year with Walt Jenifer. He came from Easton, Md., and was always ready to extol the wonders of the Eastern Shore and the Bay.

His great hobby was sailing, in which he never lost interest. During WWII, he served with the Air Force in the Intelligence Section of the General Staff. He was concerned with motion picture production, principally documentaries, which enabled him to travel extensively. He enjoyed life in Nantucket and the Caribbean, as well as in N.Y. and Baltimore. Travel, gardening, and photography were special interests. The Class extends its sincere sympathy to his widow, Tatiana, as well as to his son and daughter by a previous marriage.

Robert H. Sayre '31

AN EXECUTIVE with E.F. Hutton before he retired, Bob Sayre died Jan. 15, 1991, at his home in Montrose, Penn. He came to college from the Kent School and was the recipient of the Chrystie Memorial Scholarship. In Montrose he was president of the town council and senior warden of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. We were happy to see Bob most recently at the Class party in Jadwin Gym before the Harvard game. To his widow, Alma and their family, the Class extends condolences and sympathy.

James F. Turner Jr. '31

EVERYONE in '31 knew Jim Turner, who died May 1, 1990. He was the troubadour of our Nassau Hall step songs, as the late Art Knox was our leader. Among other things, Jim was a past president of the Princeton Alumni Assn. of Maryland and a member of the Maryland Chapter of the Red Cross. In recent years he was known as the poet laureate of the Ladew Topiary Gardens of Monkton. To his widow, Jane, and the members of their family, we convey our abiding affection and sympathy.

Charles Hathborn Wheeler '31

CHARLES HATHBORN WHEELER died July 23, 1990. Charlie went to the Montclair High School. At Princeton he was involved in fencing and was on the Tiger Board. After Princeton he graduated from Cornell Medical School

He was engaged in private practice, specializing in cardiology. He also taught at Cornell Medical College. His hobbies were high-fidelity sound equipment and high-performance cars. Much time was spent visiting in England. He retired to Bear Lake in Penn., a private residential community and nature conservancy. At Bear Lake, he was greatly loved in the residential assn. He had a brother, Thomas, in the Class of '38, a brother, Ahlborn, in the Class of '33, a son-in-law, Roger Berlind in the Class of '52, formerly an alumni trustee of the University, and a nephew, Wolcott Wheeler, in the Class of '77. To his widow, Lilly, and his family, the Class extends its sympathy.

Lars Hedstrom '32

LARS HEDSTROM DIED in Florida Feb. 15, 1991. He came to us from Hotchkiss and at college was a member of Campus Club, and the electrical manager of Triangle Club.

His Triangle experience was prophetic, for Lars spent the rest of his life tinkering with things. He operated under the rubric of industrial designer, but he was actually an inventor, the holder of a number of patents. He worked in various companies, among them Thomas & Betts, Wiss, and Perkin Elmer, but his true bent lay in solving mechanical or electrical problem with new designs or new ideas of his own. His first success came with the application of a time-control switch to a washing machine, leading to the creation of the first laundromat. During WWII Lars worked at Bates Manufacturing, helping the company convert to the production of war material. Along the way he designed plastic bundles, closures for large paint cans, electric blanket controls, boat speedometers, and many other things.

Lars was one of the very first in our Class to get married—to Amanda Bouldin a week after graduation. After 55 happy years together she died and Lars moved to Florida. He is survived by a daughter, Lisa H. Winter, a son, Lars Jr., and six grandchildren. Our sympathies go to them in the loss of a man with such an original and inventive mind.

Charles P. Emerson '33

CHARLIE (BUD) EMERSON DIED Jan. 23, 1991, at Newton Wellesley Hospital. He lived in Wellesley Hills, Mass. A memorial service was held Jan. 28 at the Unitarian-Universalist Society of Wellesley Hills.

Bud was born June 3, 1912, in Indianapolis. He prepared at Park School, Indianapolis, and at Andover.

In college Bud was concertmaster of the orchestra, a member of the choir, of Cloister Inn, and of Sigma X. He roomed with Dick Martin.

After college Bud went to Harvard Medical School, graduating in 1937. Following some time at the Univ. of Vienna and at Boston City Hospital, he joined Harvard Medical School. During WWII he was stationed in Europe, where he was a Lt. colonel, Fifth General Hospital Unit. In 1946 he became assistant professor of medicine at Boston Univ. Medical School, from which he retired in 1977 as professor and chairman of hematology.

Bud was active in medical societies and in blood research. Through the years he played the violin in the Wellesley Symphony, of which he was a founder.

On May 10, 1941, Bud married Annette L. Bryant in Hyde Park, Mass. They had three sons, C.P. Jr., James B., and Robert M.; and two daughters, Annette W. and Janet P. There are three grandchildren. Bud's sister Phoebe is the widow of our classmate Walt Compton. The Class of 1933 expresses its sympathy to the family.

Thomas C. Pears III '33

TOM PEARS, who was internationally known for distinguished printing, died in Pittsburgh, Jan. 29, 1991.

Tom was born June 20, 1911, in Follansbee, W.Va. He later lived in Braddock and Pittsburgh, Penn. He went to Peabody High, Pittsburgh. In college he was in the Band, a member of Key and Seal, and roomed with Bob Kaufman.

After college Tom joined the firm of Davis and Warde, a typography and printing firm. Through the years he built a reputation for his work for the advertising field and in design of fine books. He was involved in designing several typefaces.

Tom was a founder of the Pittsburgh Bibliophiles. He was active in Waverley Presbyterian Church, of which his father, the Rev. T.C. Pears, Jr. '07, had been minister. On Sept. 5, 1936, Tom married Isabel Hartman, who survives him. Their son, T.C. IV '68 lives in Reading, Mass. Tom's grandfather was T. C. Pears, 1871.

Tom and Isabel have been frequent visitors to Princeton. We will miss him, and we send our deep sympathy to Isabel and his family.

William Allen Cracraft Jr. '34

BILL CRACRAFT, who was formerly the V.P. of Troup Bros., Inc., an engineering contractors firm in Miami, Fla., died June 11, 1990, it has just been learned. He served Troup also as secretary and comptroller.

Bill, who was brought up in Wheeling, W.Va., and prepared for college at Chestnut Hill, moved to Miami in 1948 and made his home there since then.

He was married in 1945 to Clara May Frye, and the couple had one daughter Mikel Ann.

To Clara Cracraft and Mikel Ann we offer our sincere, although belated, sympathies.

Frank Osborne Elliott '34

OZ ELLIOTT, retired chairman of Elliott State Bank in Jacksonville, Ill., died Feb. 3, 1991, at his home in Tucson. Under his guidance, the bank, founded by his great-grandfather in 1866, moved to the forefront in technological development. Oz was instrumental in the innovative "Downtown Progress" campaign in Jacksonville in 1960, designed to assist downtown merchants in their expansion and modernization efforts.

Oz's record of civic involvement in the community is said to be virtually unmatched. Much of the city's industrial landscape stands as a testament to his efforts over the past 40 years. In 1984 he was awarded an honorary degree from Illinois College, which he'd served as a trustee for 24 years.

Surviving are his widow, Jeannette Shambaugh Elliott, whom he married in 1975 and who donated her collection of Chinese calligraphy and painting to Princeton in 1980; a daughter, Edith Christina Sorum; a son, F. Jeffris; and three grandchildren. To them we offer our sincere sympathy.

Warren Hires Turner Jr. '34

WARREN TURNER DIED Feb. 23, 1991, in Alexandria, Va., where he had lived for ten years. A varied career in banking, business, and insurance led to a degree in classics at Bard College "on the basis," he wrote, "of my bride's efforts as major domo of the college library." The bride was "Bob" (Mildred) Mial, sister of Heinie Mial.

In 1959 Warren was chosen from candidates across the nation as executive V.P. of the national Episcopal Church. The presiding bishop wanted a committed, involved layman with management skills to initiate this important role. Warren filled this position with distinction for several years. On leaving the national Church he served Trinity Church, N.Y.C., as head of administration. In the late 1970s, he was proud to be inducted into the Order of St. John.

Warren is survived by his widow and three brothers, Albert C., Dr. John II '40, and Andrew Joyce, and by numerous nieces and nephews. To them we offer our sincere sympathies.

James Edmund Walsh '34

JIM WALSH, a resident of Daytona Beach since 1969, when he moved his family from Long Island to Florida for the sake of his son's health, died Feb. 6, 1991. He had suffered from Alzheimer's disease. His son, Grover Clarence, suffering from cystic fibrosis, died in 1988 at the age of 31.

Jim Walsh was with Grumman Aircraft in Bethpage, N.Y., from 1948-69, when he took early retirement. He and his wife, Erva Jean (E.J.) Vosburgh Walsh, a 1946 graduate of Cornell, bought a motel, The Dolphin, in Mar. 1969, just in time for the influx of college students on their Easter vacation. "We've been busy as hoot-owls," Jim wrote at the time. "But a nicer bunch of kids you wouldn't want to meet."

With the gas crunch in late 1973 Jim and E.J. sold the motel, and he went to work for another one, family owned and operated. "Meeting different kids of people," he said, "keeps it interesting. I expect to stay until further notice."

Surviving besides E.J. is a daughter, Gail. To them we offer our sincere sympathies.

Robert Clifford Wilson '34

BOB WILSON, retired corporate secretary of Allied Chemical and major general in the Army Reserves, died Mar. 8, 1991, after an extended illness. A graduate of Yale Law, he joined Allied Chemical in 1951 and became secretary in 1958. He served with the Army for more than five years in WWII, principally as assistant chief of staff, G-2, 78th Infantry Division, in Europe. In the reserves he was the C.G. of the 301st Logistical Command, N.Y.C. His decorations included the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star with OLC, Croix de Guerre, and Parachutists Badge. Until recently he was active in the Soldiers', Sailors', and Airmen's Club, the Military Order of the World Wars (of which he was a past commander), and his church.

Bob served '34 as planned giving and bequests chairman from 1971 until the early 1980s, when he retired for reasons of health.

Surviving are his wife of 37 years, Bessie Larkin Wilson; a daughter, Elizabeth Tallafiero w'64; a son, Robert C. III '80; and two grandchildren. To them we offer our sincere sympathies.

The Class of 1934

Donald E. Kidd '35

DON KIDD, after a long illness, died Dec. 25, 1990, at his home in Needham, Mass., where he had lived for more than 32 years. He is survived by a son, Donald Jr., one grandchild, and three sisters. His wife, Anson Church, whom he married in 1936, and another son, Kenneth, predeceased him.

Brought up in Montclair, N.J., Don attended Montclair schools and Hotchkiss. At Princeton he majored in economics and graduated cum laude. His roommate senior year was Tom Moyer. His college activities included 150-lb. football and band.

Don's first job was with C.I.T. Financial Corp. and he advanced to V.P. of the company's Boston office, which he organized in 1959. After retirement Don remained active in business as an independent financial consultant.

The Kidds were participative citizens in Needham community affairs and were most active in the cause of mental retardation. The family had a summer home at Chilmark on Martha's Vineyard, where fishing and sailing were their means of relaxation.

The Class is sorry to lose another loyal member, and conveys its deepest sympathy to the family.

Charles Clement English Jr. '36

CLEM DIED Dec. 24, 1990, in Waynesboro, Va. He was the son of Charles C. English '06. After graduating from the Haverford School, he majored in geology at Princeton and was a member of Cottage Club.

He first worked for N.J. Zinc Co. then for the Midvale Co. and, in 1978, he retired after 26 years as manager of export sales for Universal Cyplos Steel Corp. In recent years he was Eastern representative for a West Coast producer of specialty metals for the aerospace industry.

Clem was a vestryman of St. John's Episcopal Church of Waynesboro, Va. His hobby was hiking in the Blue Ridge mountains. He was a volunteer at a tourist information center for the Skyline Division, Shenandoah Natl. Park.

He is survived by his widow, Roberta Cecil English, whom he married in 1940; sons Robert C. and C. Clement III; daughters Mrs. Ann E. Randt, Mrs. Carolyn E. Seymour; sisters Miss Edith C. English and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Duer; and six grandchildren. We of the Class will indeed miss Clem, who led an active and productive life.

John Davis Gray '36

JOHN DIED Jan. 15, 1991, in N.Y.C. He was born Mar. 1, 1914, in Blairstown, N.J.

He attended Blair Academy and graduated from the Hill School. At Princeton he majored in English and was a member of Tower Club. He graduated from Harvard Law School in 1939.

John's first job lasted 30 years. He started with ConEdison as an attorney in their legal dept., then moved onto the general staff as secretary of the company and served later as treasurer. He took early retirement in 1970, became a partner in the small law firm of his uncle-in-law Watson Washburn. The firm was dissolved on Mr. Washburn's death, and in 1977 he became of counsel at a larger law firm, Whitman and Ransom, until his own death.

He was a member of the Bar Assn. of N.Y. and of the American Bar Assn. He was a member for many years of the University Club and the Princeton Club of N.Y.

He is survived by Mary Washburn Gray, whom he married in 1939; sons Stephen V. '64 and Samuel O. '68; daughter Pauline G. Briger; and five grandchildren.

John must indeed have been proud to have had three Princeton sons. Regrettably, his youngest son David A.C. '70 died in 1975.

The Class of 1936

Rudolph Kauffmann '36

RUDY DIED of cancer Dec. 25, 1990, at home in Chevy Chase, Md. He was the son of Rudolph M. Kauffmann '05. He prepared at St. Albans School and Choate. At Princeton he majored in geology, was on the freshman and J.V. crews and was a member of Colonial Club.

He entered active duty in WWII as an ensign in the U.S. Navy. He served in the invasion of North Africa. He was released from duty in 1945 as a Lt. commander.

Rudy worked in many capacities for the old Washington Star Communications Inc., which was family owned since the Civil War. He retired in 1976 as associate editor. He was president of the Children's Hospital (now the Children's Natl. Medical Center) in Washington. He also was a member of the Gridiron Club of Washington, the Alibi Club, the Metropolitan Club, and the Chevy Chase Club, and he was president of the Percy Summer Club of Groveton, N.H. He enjoyed golf, fishing, and landscaping.

Rudy's wife, Mary Wells Kauffmann, died in 1988. He is survived by three children, daughters Elise K.B. Palmer, Edith Kauffmann, and son Christian A. Kauffmann; a brother, John M. Kauffmann '44; and five grandchildren. Rudy was a true son of Princeton and a loyal supporter of the Class.

William Benedict Johnson '37

CHEMICAL ENGINEER, inventor, world traveler Ben Johnson died in England Feb. 3, 1991, of leukemia.

Ben came to us from Hotchkiss, where he featured football, glee club, and polo. At Princeton he was president of Ivy, captain of the polo team and majored in chemical engineering.

Ben started off as a chemical engineer with M. W. Kellogg Co. in N.Y., before two years and four months in the Navy. His forte was landing craft and his theater ribbons included the American, Mediterranean, Southern France, Pacific and Occupation of Japan, emerging as a lieutenant (j.g.) in 1945. He continued with Kellogg until 1958, when he became a consultant in South Africa, England, and the U.S. He was holder of some 30 U.S. patents. One was the basic patent for large oil-from-coal plants in operation in South Africa, where he was project manager of the first plant, Sasol No. 1. He produced a new boiler design which produced steam for power generation without air pollution.

Along the way, Ben was a noted polo player in the N.Y. area and master of the hounds at the Essex Hunt Club in Peapack, N.J., when not sailing his 35-ft. Hinckley or singing in a quartet and noisily playing golf with his three brothers, one Harvard, two Yale. He left his widow, Peggy; sons, Richard F. '61 and David P. '69 by his first wife Helen Hanford; a stepdaughter, Gayle; and three grandsons; to all of whom we send our deepest condolences.

James Benjamin Kerr '38

JIM KERR, admired Ft. Lauderdale lawyer, died Jan. 22, 1991, in Asheville, N.C., near his summer home after a long illness.

He came to Princeton via University School in Pittsburgh and Haverford Prep. to major in history. He was manager of the soccer team, supervisor of gatemen and inspectors at the stadium, and a member of Elm Club. After earning his law degree at the Univ. of Florida, he served four years as an officer on corvettes, mine sweepers, and destroyer escorts on both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. He then set up practice in Hollywood, Fla. After eight years he moved to Fort Lauderdale, where he practiced until retirement in 1988.

Jim enjoyed the arts and was one of the first president of the Fort Lauderdale Museum and was president of the Broward County Bar Assn. He was buried from All Saints Episcopal Church in Fort Lauderdale.

He is survived by his widow, Dorothy, sons James B. and Leigh R., daughter Jean (Mrs. Fraser Schaufele), and seven grandchildren. They have our deep sympathy.

John Gurd McCulloch '38

PRINCETON AND OUR CLASS lost a truly loyal friend when John died Dec. 30, 1990. John prepared at Choate. At Princeton, he roomed with Dan Coyle, Frank Hamilton, Tom Wood, and Bill Wood, and belonged to Colonial Club and Triangle. He went on to Harvard Business School, where he roomed with John Laporte.

In 1941, he married Natalie Warren and began his career as a certified public accountant. He worked for Price Waterhouse, then James D. Miller in N.Y., with an interruption for service in the Army's cost analysis branch from 1943 to 1946. He also worked for Motor Finance, before forming his own firm. In 1976, he retired to Osprey, Fla., where he served as treasurer of the Sarasota Harvard Club and was a member of the Princeton Club of Sarasota and the St. Andrew's Society.

He was a past treasurer of our Class, class agent, and A.G. chairman for Short Hills, N.J., with a 100% participation. New Eyes for the Needy was another interest.

We remember John for his warm friendship, his enthusiasm for Princeton, and his marvelous laugh. Deepest sympathy is extended to Nat, his beloved wife of 50 years, his brother Bill '37, and to all who knew and loved John.

Charles Hopkins Reed '38

THE CLASS AND HIS COMMUNITY lost a man who lived his high principles of equality and brotherhood when Charlie Reed died in his native Bel Air, Md., Feb. 1, 1991.

A graduate of Episcopal High School in Alexandria, Va., he majored in English and belonged to Tower Club. He attended Univ. of Maryland for his law degree. Except for his Navy service during WWII, when he rose to lieutenant, his career was spent in his home country. He probably did more pro bono work than anyone we know, taking on cases for those who could not pay, or causes which, though unpopular the time, were accepted in the end. He never sought the limelight, preferring to work behind the scenes for harmony and justice. He, more than anyone else, brought about the desegregation of his county's schools. He was a voice for peace from the early days of Vietnam to the present. His advocacy was gentle, persuasive, and effective, so that those who opposed him gained a high regard for him.

We his classmates honored ourselves when we presented him with our Class Distinguished Service Award in 1989. Charlie is survived by his loving widow, Lois; daughters Susan Walls and Laurie Reed; sons David and Michael; and a sister Jean Graybeal and her husband Eugene. With them we rejoice in a life well-lived.

Edward G. Hubbard '40

ON JAN. 18, 1991, Ed Hubbard died at his home in Carlsbad, Calif. From Lawrenceville School, Ed was enrolled for two years with the Class of 1939, then repeated sophomore year with 1940, leaving college at the end of that year. He considered himself a member of 1940, and confirmed this by contributing a report to our 25th Year Book. He was a member of Cap & Gown and roomed with John Foster '39.

During WWII, Ed flew bombers in the Pacific and remained extremely active subsequently in the Air Force Reserve. Until recently, he had been flying aircraft and helicopters. After the war Ed studied painting and art, pursued this interest throughout his life, and at one time had a successful showing of his work in N.Y.C. In addition, he was a member of the N.Y. Stock Exchange.

He is survived by two sons, Steven D. and Michael P.; a daughter, Sydney H. Anderson; and five grandchildren. To the entire family, the Class forwards its warmest sympathy and condolences.

William Martin Vogel Jr. '40

AFTER A REPEAT ENCOUNTER with heart surgery, Marty died Mar. 3, 1991, at his Mendham, N.J. home. Classmates Ted Nevins and Larry Morris ushered at his memorial service. Marty prepared for Princeton at Hill School, majored in psychology, enjoyed Cottage Club, and participated in track.

After graduation he took up flying, leading to his becoming a Naval fighter pilot, serving both at home and abroad. He then settled in northern N.J. to work with Standard Container Co., a family-owned business. Eventually he became the firm's president and succeeded in substantially expanding it. In 1970, the company was acquired by Brockway Glass, and for five years Marty continued as head of its standard container division and as a member of the board of directors. For many years, Marty was deeply involved with thoroughbred horses at his Mendham farm and active in the racing community. The breeding and raising of race horses was one of his great loves and interests.

Marty is survived by his widow, Minsi; two sons, William Martin III and James G.; a daughter, Marliese Susan Spalding; and six grandchildren. To them all, we convey our sympathy and also our gratefulness for having had Marty as a longtime faithful classmate and firm friend.

Richard Blackwood Plumer '41

THE CLASS LOST a devoted member when Dick Plumer died of lymphoma Nov. 15, 1990.

After high school in Miami, Dick spent a year at Exeter, not for academic reasons but to acclimate himself to tweeds. He had enrolled at Harvard but switched when his adviser warned him he "was not the Harvard type." At Princeton Dick was summa cum laude in romance languages and won six varsity letters in soccer and baseball. He played third base on the championship team which beat Columbia 2-1 on May 17, 1939, in the first outdoor sporting event ever televised.

In the summer of 1940, Dick went on a Navy cruise, then directly from graduation to V-7 training and North Atlantic duty aboard the U.S.S. PC 617, where he became her C.O. He won a Bronze Star and a Purple Heart.

Back home in Miami he joined his father's business, Richard Plumer Design, which grew under Dick's guidance to be one of the preeminent interior firms in Florida. Although he never thought of himself as a designer, he was made a lifetime member of the American Society of Interior Designers. Dick served as a trustee of the Univ. of Miami and Barry College, on the Orange Bowl Committee, and as president of the Crippled Children's Society. His superb athleticism remained a hallmark, and he won numerous doubles tournaments at the Royal Palm Tennis Club and elsewhere.

The Class's deepest sympathy and love go out to Dick's wife of 45 years, Mary; their children, Richard II and Patience Flick; and their Flick grandchildren, Penny Blackwood, Bonnie Love and Willis Plumer.

Arthur E. Rice Jr. '41

ART DIED SUDDENLY from a heart attack Jan. 28, 1991, while on vacation in Costa Rica with his wife, Muriel.

Art grew up in Adams County, Penn., the son of a fifth-generation apple grower. He came to Princeton after a year at the Taft School. He majored in economics and was a member of Elm Club.

After graduation he served as an Army intelligence officer in the South Pacific. Returning home after the war, he revived and relocated Rice Fruit Co., the packing operation which his father had begun in 1913. Art purchased additional farms and formed H&L Orchard Co. Today both companies are among the largest of their type in the East.

Art married Muriel Larsen (Vassar '42) in Oct. 1942. They lived in Gettysburg, Penn., where they raised six children: Gudrun, David '69, Ted, John, Mark, and Kristin. All four of his sons were in business with him. Both of his daughters are practicing attorneys. He has eleven grandchildren.

In addition to his church and civic activities, Art served as a director of the Knouse Foods Co-operative, the Gettysburg National Bank, the C.C.N.B. Corp., and the National Apple Inst.

Art loved his family and his apple trees. He loved baseball and books. He loved to travel with Muriel, and he loved Princeton. We extend our deepest sympathy to his family and friends.

The Class of 1941

Richard Pugh Stifel '42

WITH STEEF'S PASSING Nov. 15, 1991, the Class has lost one of its most congenial, effervescent and joyful personalities. Typical of his humor was his response to his long-time golf companion, then-Secretary of State William Rogers, upon being asked for a long "gimme": "Putt it I'm not one of those minions of yours down at the department."

A Cincinnati, Oh. native, Steef was on the freshman and J.V. baseball teams and was a performing member of both the Glee Club and Triangle. Senior year he was president of Charter Club and roomed with Fernald, Matthews, Hazlewood, Fiddler, and Beatty. Upon graduation he moved to Washington and served as a lieutenant in the Navy, including a year's duty on the battleship New Jersey.

In 1981 he retired as circulation director after more than 30 years with the U.S. News and World Report publications. Besides a lifelong interest in golf, his main avocations were naval history and an extensive collection of rare, early U.S. flags. A member of the Society of the Cincinnati, Steef served on the board of two Washington schools, the city's largest hospital and the Chevy Chase and Princeton Clubs. He was active as well in a number of other civic and professional institutions.

Steef's principal and abiding interest, however, was his close-knit family, consisting of his wife of nearly half a century, Chloe, their five children, and now eight grandchildren. The Class shares in their loss and offers them our sincere condolences.

Elston Hunt Bergen III '43

ELSTON DIED Mar. 28, 1991, at the Univ. of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington, Conn. He was 70.

Born in Glenridge, N.J., he lived in West Hartford, Conn. before moving to Farmington five years ago. Bergey also had a summer residence in Holderness, N.H.

Elston graduated Blair Academy in Blairstown, N.J., and entered Princeton in 1939, graduating in 1943. During WWII he served in the European Theatre as a captain of Army Special Forces. His business career was devoted almost entirely to advertising. Bergey served as an account executive for K.S. Shenton and Co. and Wilson Haight & Welsh, both of Hartford.

While on campus, Elston belonged to Cloister. At the time of his death, he was a member of Farmington Country Club.

He is survived by his widow, the former Nancy Wigg; three sons, E. Hunt Bergen IV and his wife Jane, Richard E. Bergen and his wife Eileen, and Gordon C. Bergen; a daughter, Dr. Elizabeth J. Bergen; a brother, Eugene; four grandchildren; a niece and nephew. To all, we offer our most heartfelt condolences.

Charles R. Phillips '43

IT WAS ONLY RECENTLY learned that Chuck died Oct. 18, 1989, in Hartford Hospital. Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., he lived most of his youth in Waterbury, Conn., and the bulk of his married life in Marlborough, Conn.

Chuck had two careers. He served for many years in the Air Force. Following his retirement from the military, he became a sales representative of Business Forms and Systems, ultimately retiring from that firm.

He was a member of the Disabled American Veterans, the American Ex-POWs, and the Retired Officers' Assn.

Chuck suffered for many years, with great fortitude and personal courage, from painful rheumatoid arthritis. The last two years of his life he was completely bedridden.

Besides his widow, the former Doris Palmer, he leaves two sons, Charles R. Phillips Jr. and William F. Phillips; two daughters, Elizabeth Cicero and Kathleen Wood; a sister, Elizabeth Moore; 12 grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. A brother, Francis T. Phillips Jr. '44, died in Jan. 1990. To the entire Phillips family, we offer our deepest sympathies.

Gordon Raymond Whitman '44

GORDON "LEFTY" WHITMAN passed away Dec. 10, 1990, at his home in No. Berwick, Me. Cursed with obstructive pulmonary disease, which gradually confined his life, he never lost his dry humor and his love of Princeton. He looked on his large family, expanded with his second marriage to Irene Watson in 1981, with great pride and fondness. In his faithful Class notes he enjoyed mentioning the family in-law Harvards outnumbering his Princetons, father '19 and son Gordon Jr. '72.

Whit came to us from Mercesburg. He was a fine athlete, but chemical engineering limited him to baseball. After Midshipman's School at Cornell, he served as chief engineer on destroyers in both the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets, leaving his three years of active duty as a lieutenant (j.g.). He worked, as he put it, from N.Y. to California in the chemical industry, before returning to the East for the last 30 years of his career with General Foods. After his medical retirement, he kept busy as an investment adviser and running a small antique business.

Gordon was a crackerjack golfer, until breathing difficulties led him back to the sea and his great joy, The Whim's End, a 36-ft. Chris Craft Sport Fisherman. Our heartfelt sympathies go out to Irene, his widow; Evelyn Whitman, his mother; Gordon Jr. '72, Stephen, and Suzanne; stepsons Craig, Jeffrey, and Stephen Watson; and the 13 grandchildren. Gordon, you'll be missed.

The Class of 1944

Arthur Carroll Jones Jr. '45

ARTHUR CARROLL JONES JR. died May 23, 1990. A progressive spinal stenosis was ultimately unresponsive to surgery. Casey entered Princeton from the Friends School in Baltimore and Johns Hopkins.

Casey suffered severe polio at age six; there followed years of physiotherapy. He knew victory when he was selected as center on the All-Maryland football team at Friends. At Princeton he was co-captain of freshman lacrosse and 150 football. He was a member of Cap & Gown and roomed with Tom Guthrie. As a volunteer in WWII, he was sent to France as a sergeant-major, Army D.E.M.L. He then returned to Princeton, receiving a bachelor's degree in English in 1947. He entered the advertising business, and experienced great success at B.B.D. & O., J. Walter Thompson, and as ad director for Kentucky Fried Chicken.

His 1950 marriage to Betty Marable resulted in two sons, Casey III and Hunter. The family resided until 1977 in North Tarrytown, N.Y. They moved briefly to California before returning to his native Baltimore, where Casey resided at death.

Casey is remembered for his pointed wit and imaginative sense of humor. He was above all a humanist, receptive to a world that he saw as often funny but just as often good. In addition to Betty and his sons, Casey is survived by a grandson Casey IV. To all, the Class extends its deep sympathy.

Harrington A. Lackey '47

THE CLASS LOST ONE of its most loyal members when Hal died of cancer Feb. 19, 1991, at age 65 in Nashville, Tenn. He was a practicing patent, trademark, and copyright attorney who lived and practiced his specialty in Nashville most of his adult life.

Hal entered Princeton in July 1943, and graduated with high honors in engineering in 1949. Like so many of us, his college years were interrupted by Army service. He was in the infantry and served in Europe where he received the Bronze Star and Combat Infantryman's Badge. By an amazing coincidence, Col. Vaden M. Lackey '25, Hal's father, was on the same ship as Hal when they came home after the war.

Hal was an active member of the Methodist Church, Y.M.C.A., the Exchange Club, and Belle Made Country Club. In each of these organizations he gave freely of his time, often in leadership positions. He and his wife, Jane, were two of the hosts at our Class mini-reunion in Nashville last January.

Hal was a considerate, loyal friend whom we will remember with deep appreciation and a happy smile for his subtle sense of humor and the many enjoyable hours we spent in his company.

We extend our deepest sympathy to Jane; his son, Harrington A. Lackey Jr.; his mother, Mrs. Vaden M. Lackey Sr.; and his brother, Vaden M. Lackey Jr. '50.

The Class of 1947

John S. Ralston '48

JACK RALSTON died Jan. 30, 1991. Born in Brooklyn, Jack came to us by way of the U.S. Navy.

A premature explosion while training for an underwater demolitions team, known as seals, resulted in partial disability and surgery which left him with a very small stomach (necessitating five or six meals a day). Undeterred, he majored in geology, coxed the 150s crew, and was treasurer of Colonial. He graduated in 1948.

Jack found his first job in lead and zinc mining not to his liking and stayed only long enough to resign. In Denver he entered the oil and gas business, which was far more to his liking. After a foray into the stock brokerage arena as an energy expert and some years in the Bahamas in the cement business and real estate, Jack returned to Denver to form Ralston Oil and Gas Company.

Jack's love of the sea and sailing prompted a move to Carmel and finally to Charlestown, R.I. In addition to interests in oil and gas, he conducted a venture of building and installing floating concrete docks. Jack was eternally optimistic. He considered his Princeton days as his greatest experience.

Jack is survived by his widow, Jean, sons John and Craig, and four grandchildren. To all of them, the Class offers deepest sympathy.

Frank Soler '51

FRANK DIED May 19, 1990, in Houston.

He was born in Duitama, Colombia, Oct. 11, 1915. He joined our Class as a transfer from Columbia Univ. and majored in civil engineering. Because of his age and the rigor of his studies in a language that was fairly foreign to him at the time, he lived with his wife on Vandeventer Street.

In the words of his son, Richard '73, "My mother tells me that my father was well-loved by his colleagues. She would welcome them into their little home and go off to sleep, leaving them with coffee and pie and intense study sessions into the night."

After graduation, Frank went to Anaco, Venezuela, where he worked in a petroleum camp operated by Mobil Oil. He became an American citizen in 1956 and was transferred to Caracas as chief general engineer. He worked for Mobil as services manager for 14 years. When he retired, he bought a transportation company in Venezuela and ran it for three years. He retired in 1981 and the Solers settled in Houston.

Frank was an avid sportsman. His hunting trips while in Venezuela produced many meals of fish and fowl for his family and friends.

In addition to Bertha, his widow, and his son, Richard, Frank is survived by a second son, Frank, and a daughter, Linda. They have our sympathy and best wishes.

JED PHILP DIED suddenly of a heart attack in Presbyterian Hospital, N.Y.C., Jan. 18, 1990.

Jed was cast from a very special mold. Courty of manner, intensely loyal to his family, friends, and country, and graced with many gifts, he developed an extended family as diverse as it was numerous.

After graduating summa cum laude from Exeter, Jed won both the Spencer Trask Medal and Class of 1876 Awards as a freshman. His love of oratory led to involvement with the Debate Panel, Senate, and Clio Party, and the Pre-Law Society. A member of Cloister Inn, he was a cum laude graduate, majoring in history.

Jed began weightlifting at Princeton, and became so proficient that, according to one source, he won a Bronze Medal (heavyweight division) at the Rome Olympics, 1960. To maintain himself at Harvard Law School, he wrestled professionally during the summers, in New England and Southeastern Canada.

After the U.S. Army and law school, Jed joined the law office of Walter G. Dunnington in N.Y. He moved to the investment firm of Dominick and Dominick, and ultimately became senior V.P. of the Fiduciary Trust Co. Ind.

Among his many interests, he was devoted to the Fund for the Blind, the N.Y. Infirmary, and St. John's Episcopal Church.

He is survived by his brother, Sanford; sister-in-law, Christine; and his beloved niece and nephew, Katherine Louise and John Nicholas, to whom we extend our deepest sympathies.

WE LOST DICK JOHNSON to melanoma Dec. 22, 1990. He died in Cumberland, Md., where he was born and raised, and where he spent most of his professional career as an orthopedic surgeon.

Dick graduated from Allegheny High School, where he played football and was the top student-athlete. At Princeton he roomed with a group of classmates known as the "Witherspoon A.C." and was a member of Terrace Club. He majored in biology, writing his senior thesis on experimental embryology. Following graduation Dick attended Johns Hopkins Medical School. In 1960 he wed Barbara Montana. After internship at the Univ. of Indiana, Dick entered the Army, spending two years in Germany and completing an orthopedic residency. In 1972 Dick and his family moved back to Cumberland, where his medical career flourished and where he established himself as a beloved member of his community. He loved nature and the outdoors, was an avid runner and skier, and enjoyed bird watching, hiking, photography, and travel.

Dick is survived by his widow, Barbara, and his three children, Wendy, Chris '87, and Marta. Together with them we share their happy memories of this extraordinary man and the deep sense of loss on his passing.

Frank Engel III '63

FRANK DIED May 27, 1990, at Memorial Sloan Kettering Hospital after a long illness.

He was an accountant with a private practice in Manhattan, specializing in financial and tax planning. Earlier, he was with Arthur Young & Co. in Newark, while he earned a C.P.A. After college he earned an M.B.A. from Seton Hall and became an engineer in computers and data processing with Westinghouse Electric Corp. in Pittsburgh, his hometown.

Frank's avocation was sailing. He was a member of Huguenot and Sheldrake yacht clubs and avidly raced his yacht, ARIM, often winning trophies on the Long Island circuit.

At Princeton, he majored in mathematics, was in the yacht club, played interclub hockey, worked in circulation for Time magazine and belonged to Court Club, the Bridge Club, and Whig-Clio.

Surviving Frank are his parents, Erma and Frank Jr.; his brother, Thomas R.; his grandmothers Bessie Engel and Margaret Booth; his sisters, Dr. Margaret Rae and Linda Winter; and three nephews, Benjamin and Jonathan Winter and Andrew Rae.

Jeffrey Charles Rhode '63

JEFF DIED PEACEFULLY at home in Lyttelton, New Zealand, Feb. 7, 1991, after a two-year struggle against myeloma.

He was a neuropathologist at North Canterbury Hospital. After training in pathology in Glasgow, Boston, and Cleveland, he became a specialist in Christchurch in 1981 and later supervised the neuropathology service at Christchurch Hospital. A hospital colleague, Randall Allardyce '65 said: "The combination of clinical expertise, skill in undergraduate and registrar teaching, and ability to make everyone feel better for having spoken to him meant that he was strongly supported by his colleagues."

Jeff, whose father was Solon L. Rhode Jr. '35, came to Princeton from Camp Hill, Penn. At Princeton he was a swimmer and a biology major and roomed in the renowned Quadrangle Taj Mahal Suite. He completed his medical training at Temple in 1968, and then became a resident in Denver. He and Debbie were married in 1970 near her home in Roxwell, Essex, England, and then moved to Guam, where Jeff was a flight surgeon with the Air Force.

In New Zealand he and Debbie lived on a small farm with their two daughters in what Jeff called "an environment unsurpassed." He was an enthusiastic forester/farmer, motorist, swimmer and runner, as well as the recent president of the Lyttelton Rotary Club.

The Class extends its deepest sympathy to his widow, two daughters, Kimberley and Georgina, and brother Dr. Solon L. Rhode III '60.

Robert Vincent Parmele '75

BOB PARMELE DIED SUDDENLY May 31, 1990, at his home in Middletown, N.Y. He came to Princeton from Roscoe, N.Y., and majored in the Woodrow Wilson School, graduating with honors.

After Princeton Bob briefly attended law school at Columbia Univ. before transferring to its Ph.D. program in political science. While there, he was assistant to the Chancellor's Office of Policy Analysis, Research, and Planning, as well as chairman of the Dept. of Political Science Graduate Students Assn.

Bob was active in numerous political campaigns, including Morris Udall's 1976 presidential bid. He worked as a college lecturer, as an aide to N.Y.C. Councilman Henry Stern, and recently as a computer programmer for the N.Y. State Hospital system.

Bob's passion was politics, and his gift was writing. Possessing keen original insight into the political aspect of life, which extended far beyond simple electoral mechanics, he wrote in an effortless metaphorical stream of philosophy, history, and popular culture.

We shall miss Bob's unrelenting intellectual honesty and wry sense of humor. The Class extends sincere sympathy to his family.

Liberté, Égalité, Maternité: In France, the State Wants You to Have a Healthy Baby

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT found out I was pregnant before my mother got the news. My gynecologist looked over the laboratory results, congratulated me, and then took out a sheaf of official papers. She signed and stamped the forms, I added my signature at the bottom, and thus I was registered in France's system of pregnancy surveillance.

The health of my baby-to-be was now a matter for the state.

Contrast my experience in France with the U.S. system, which leaves expectant mothers to look after themselves according to their income, education, motivation, and ability to obtain care. It is a system, health experts say, that is riddled with contradictions. Medical care in America is regarded as the most technologically sophisticated in the world—capable of saving the lives of desperately ill 1.5-pound premature babies—but it can't guarantee adequate attention for pregnant women or their infants.

A few weeks after the positive pregnancy test, I received by mail from the government a booklet of instructions and coupons that looked like an automobile-care manual. It was my carnet de maternité, literally a maternity notebook, and it was marked with my pregnancy registration number. It outlined how I should feed and care for myself during the next nine months, listing the dates of what amounted to a 150-mile checkup, a 500-mile checkup, and so on.

I was to see my obstetrician a minimum of five times—at four months, six months, eight months, nine months, and a postnatal visit. The cost of all examinations would be fully covered by French social security—the national health insurance system financed through payroll deductions. After each exam, the doctor would sign and stamp the appropriate coupon from my carnet de maternité and send it to the social-security office. As an incentive to me to keep these appointments, the French government would pay me 830 francs (about $145 at current rates) per month from the fourth month of pregnancy through the third month after the birth. These payments would be made regardless of my income.

My pregnancy was in jeopardy because my mother, like thousands of other American women in the 1950s, had been given diethylstilbestrol, or DES, while she was pregnant with me. DES, a notorious and now discredited antimiscarriage drug, leads to congenital gynecological defects and sometimes even cancer in daughters of the women who took it. Thus, I knew from the start that I would have a grossesse à risque, a high-risk pregnancy.

For that reason,

I enrolled at a large public teaching hospital—Hôpital St. Vincent de Paul—devoted exclusively to maternity and pediatrics. Relying on a dictionary, I reported that I was thirty-seven years old with a spontaneous first pregnancy after five years of unsuccessful treatment for infertility, and that my mother had taken DES. I was placed in the care of a first-rate obstetrician, a specialist in treating DES cases. The doctor, Michel Tournaire, chief of the French College of Gynecologists and Obstetricians, put me on a bi-weekly schedule of checkups.

At three months, when I needed an operation to reinforce my cervix, he performed the surgery. The operation, plus a three-day stay in the hospital, was all covered by social security and cost me not one extra franc. When early contractions started in the sixth month, I was ordered to stay at home in bed and take medication to stop the spasms. Now the French surveillance system really went into high gear.

Robin Herman '73 and her son, Zachary Jacob Horvitz, age three days, in the Hôpital St. Vincent de Paul, Paris. Extensive prenatal care eased her high-risk pregnancy.

after the birth. These payments would be made regardless of my income.

The carnet de maternité also detailed my rights under French law. If employed, I was entitled to six weeks of paid maternity leave before the birth and ten weeks afterward. If the doctor certified it was necessary, I could take two more.

This was my introduction to how a country with socialized medicine approaches maternity care. Essentially, France would pay me to have a healthy baby, spending money early in an attempt to minimize expensive neonatal and pediatric problems later.

Such an investment in prenatal care has a direct effect on a nation's infant mortality statistics. France's rate in 1988, according to UNICEF, was 7.7 deaths per 1,000 births, among the lowest in the world. Sweden and Finland did even better—only 5.8 deaths per 1,000. By contrast, the U.S. rate was 9.9 per 1,000. Compared with the rest of Western Eu-

Each week, the hospital sent to my home a sage-femme—a kind of maternity nurse with four years of medical school—to give me a full checkup. This service is free. She took a urine sample, measured my blood pressure and the growth of the uterus, listened for the baby's heartbeat, and checked to see that the cervical stitches were holding. She also inquired about my morale and spent time trying to boost my spirits. A second sage-femme came to my home—at a modest charge—to give my husband and me private lessons in labor and childbirth. One week, I needed a blood test. A local laboratory sent a technician to my bedside to take the sample—covered by social security at no extra charge.

In the seventh month, further contractions landed me at Hôpital St. Vincent de Paul, where I was obliged to lie quietly for six weeks with an intravenous tube inserted in my arm. The medication again controlled the situation, and I was monitored assiduously by a rotating team of maternity residents who reported to my doctor. Throughout my stay, doctors visited me twice daily, without fail. My contractions were measured several times a week, and I was given an occasional sonogram. Three sonograms are standard for all pregnant women in France—high risk or not. The nurses were vigilant, peeking in on me at intervals all day and night. Everyone gave me the feeling that I was safe, and that the team would let nothing jeopardize my pregnancy. "Tenez le coup!" the nurses and doctors urged. Hang in there!

I am grateful to the French government for paying for my long stay in the hospital. My only costs were for a rented TV and a private telephone line, but this is not to say that I spent weeks in the lap of luxury. Hôpital St. Vincent de Paul had the tired look of an institution operated for years on an inadequate budget. Paint on the ceiling was peeling. The beds were old-fashioned, springy, and soft. There were occasional shortages of equipment and amenities, and patients were asked to provide their own towels, soap, and other toiletries. Hospital gowns were made of paper, so everyone wore T-shirts or nightgowns from home. Supportive husbands shuttled back and forth with laundry.

On the bright side, this being France, the food at St. Vincent de Paul was excellent for a hospital. Two hot meals a day included such dishes as veau bourguignon (veal with burgundy sauce) and lapin sauce moutarde (rabbit with mustard sauce). But the typical French breakfast, café au lait and a roll, left something to be desired. "That's it?" I asked the nurses incredulously. They laughed. Another hungry American. I was offered an extra roll.

When I reached thirty-five weeks of pregnancy (a full-term pregnancy is forty weeks), Tournaire was all smiles and congratulated me. He confided that initially he had had his doubts about my case. A DES daughter with my problems, he said, had only about a 20 percent chance of reaching the thirty-five-week mark. From this point on, he assured me, I could basically count on a healthy birth. "Bravo," he added as he left my room.

My hard-kicking fetus and I hung on until thirty-seven weeks, when my cervical stitches were removed. Three days later, as predicted, I went into labor. At my request, I received an epidural anesthetic, which deadens feeling in the lower half of the body. (Natural childbirth isn't in vogue in France.) At first, I was attended by a duo of sages-femmes. They perform about half the deliveries in France. But if a case gets complicated, a physician is called in. When my baby began to suffer some distress from my strong contractions, two doctors immediately appeared at my feet and took over. With the anesthesiologist on my left, my husband on my right, and two sages-femmes and two doctors in attendance, I felt protected and tried to concentrate on my job: breathing and pushing.

Our son, Zachary, popped out after two and a half hours of labor. He was laid across my stomach, and, in a matter of seconds, reassured us with a good, strong cry. Then he was whisked away to be cleaned up. He soon reappeared, dressed in one of the little outfits we'd brought for him and sleeping contentedly in a clear-plastic crib. I was still on the labor table when a sage-femme suggested that I start breast-feeding right then. It was the first indication I had that France is serious about instructing and supporting mothers who want to breast-feed. In fact, many French companies, as part of contracts with their unions, give women who breast-feed an extra three months of paid maternity leave—for a total of six months' paid leave after the birth.

People always talk about the trials of giving birth, but you don't hear much about the challenge of recovery afterward. Between bleeding, soreness, stitches, fatigue, and postpartum depression, recovery is no easy matter, and French hospitals recognize this fact by advising new mothers to stay at least five more days in the hospital. By that time, women on my corridor who had started the week as wincing, shuffling zombies were exiting the hospital coiffed, perfumed, and jeweled—better able to rejoin normal Parisian life. Under the French system, in fact, women have a right to twelve postpartum days in the hospital free of charge. The average hospital stay for an uncomplicated birth in the U.S. is about three days.

Before I left the hospital, I asked about the availability of baby nurses for the early weeks at home and was told about help provided free of charge by the City of Paris. Baby specialists, called puéricultrices, who are city employees call on new mothers and offer practical advice on feeding, hygiene, and general baby care. During the first week home, a lively Frenchwoman spent forty minutes with me answering questions, shook my hand, and then left without charging me a thing.

Following the instructions on the carte de maternité and in order to continue receiving my monthly stipend and comply with requirements for Zachary's care, I took him to a pediatrician for the prescribed one-month checkup. The doctor entered his measurements of Zachary's length and weight into my son's very own carte de santé (health certificate), which was issued to him at birth and serves as a permanent record of all his medical care and childhood vaccinations. The last command of my carte de maternité was for a checkup six weeks after the birth. French health care is not only for babies. The hospital also gave me a prescription for ten sessions of physical therapy (completely covered by social security), which is part of the postpartum package for all new mothers to get them back in shape. Was this therapy a nod to the French fashion industry?

France really wanted me to have a healthy baby, and I did. We Americans tend to think that we have the world's best health care, and in a certain sense we do: the most sophisticated medical technology is to be found in the U.S. But when it comes to consistent, general health care for ordinary people, there are other nations that do a far better job. From my experiences, France seems to be one of those nations, and Zachary and I are lucky we were able to take advantage of it.

Princeton's Program in Afro-American Studies

*In recent years Princeton has strengthened its position as a leader in the study of African American culture. Evidence of this is found in a variety of departments, programs, new faculty appointments, and other endeavors. Much of this activity is coordinated through the Program in Afro-American Studies, which has been making important contributions to academic life at Princeton since its creation more than twenty years ago. The current director of the program is Professor of Religion Cornel West 80. I have asked Professor West to share some of his thoughts about our work in this area. — H.T.S.

Recent debates about the complex role of race, class, gender, and empire are often depressing and debilitating. These intense exchanges—usually more bureaucratic battles over faculty and curriculum than scholarly dialogues over the proper study of the past and present—tend to generate more heat than light. Instead of subtle analyses of the ambiguous legacies of civilizations and the hybrid character of cultures, we are offered monolithic conceptions of the West—either to defend or condemn. Such sophomoric conceptions are symptomatic of the lack of a sophisticated historical sense as well as the present polarizations in American culture. The Program in Afro-American Studies at Princeton may offer some clues as to how we might transform tendentious debates into serious intellectual quests for truth and knowledge.

The Afro-American studies program—similar to the Women's studies program led by my fine colleague Christine Stansell—shuns the very framework that pits Eurocentrists against multiculturalists. This framework not only promotes Manichean viewpoints and yields either/or options; it also precludes candid communication and decent interaction among colleagues. The primary aim of the Afro-American studies program is to produce in the minds of students a nuanced historical sense that permits them to probe—in an empathic and critical manner—the sufferings and undergoings of a particular slice of humanity over time and space. This historical sense rejects static formulations that undergird cathartic quests for identity; it also undermines dogmatic formulas that support nostalgic claims about a now-lost golden age. This historical sense is inseparable from an open, flexible, self-critical sensibility.

The Afro-American studies program is integral to fellow Departments of History, Anthropology, English, Politics, Religion, and Philosophy precisely because it contributes to the reconception of what we mean by modernity, modernism, modernization as well as the American experiment of democracy and freedom. Since Afro-Americans were constituted as a people—with their own hybrid ways of life—in, by, and through the modern age, it is not surprising that their plight and products have much to do with discerning often overlooked truths and facts about modernity and its aftermath.

The strong support of Princeton's administration and faculty has facilitated the recent arrival of some of the nation's top scholars and interpreters of the Afro-American past and present. Nell Painter in history, Arnold Rampersad and Wahneema Lubiano in literary studies, Carol Swain in politics, and, above all, Toni Morrison in the humanities are the core of this new group. Furthermore, Gayle Pemberton's administrative leadership as associate director has consolidated the program, just as superb veteran Princeton professors such as Howard Taylor and Albert Raboteau contribute greatly to its excellence.

What is characteristic of the members of this group is not simply their intellectual stature but, more importantly, the expertise they bring to enhance the larger—and exciting—dialogue with other colleagues in a broad array of disciplines in the University community. These outstanding figures have come to Princeton not to create an intellectual ghetto that idealizes black life, but rather to be significant—and towering—interlocutors within Princeton's ongoing pursuit of truth and knowledge. In this way, Princeton's ability to transcend the stale debate about Eurocentrism and multiculturalism depends, in part, on the high quality of its Afro-American scholars, their eagerness to be at the center of the most informed intellectual activity at Princeton (which includes constituting new academic discussions), and a collegial openness to these new scholarly contributions based on the persuasiveness of their arguments and acuity of their work. Based on my three years at Princeton, I conclude that these efforts, on all fronts, are highly promising. We can only hope that other institutions learn from our example and take heed

“The Program in Afro-American Studies at Princeton may offer some clues as to how we might transform tendentious debates into serious intellectual quests for truth and knowledge.”

PEUGEOT
Beyond the obviousSM

1991 Peugeot 405 models are intelligently priced between $15,490 and $21,990. MSRP. Excludes tax, title, options, registration and destination charges. In Canada call 1-416-566-1900.

Europeans have long appreciated the remarkable engineering and world-class styling of a Peugeot.

Yet, here in America, a Peugeot 405 is a rare pleasure. Perhaps because a full appreciation of one requires the kind of thorough scrutiny few car buyers exercise.

The 405's patented 8-valve shock absorbers, for example, are far from obvious, yet they contribute to the renowned Peugeot road feel that is immediately apparent. Two densities of foam are a subtle but effective way to eliminate seat springs and the road vibrations they transmit. And less obvious still is the sophisticated composite barrier beneath the roof that absorbs road noise.

But you'll quickly understand the value of every aspect of the Peugeot 405 with closer scrutiny. For the dealer nearest you call 1-800-447-4700.

Bush's Honorary Degree

Lord Acton spoke these wise words a century ago: "There is no worse heresy than that the office sanctifies the holder of it." That is precisely why I believe Princeton was hasty rather than judicious, and certainly premature, in conferring an honorary degree on President Bush (PAW, June 12).

This may set some of my fellow alumni frothing at the mouth, but I urge them to pause and consider. This letter is not about personality or partisanship, for I am a lifelong Republican, but rather about principle. I trust my comments will be tested in that context.

The process by which Princeton awards honorary degrees is a mystery to me, as I assume it is to many other Princetonians. From a purely pragmatic viewpoint, giving George Bush such a degree may have been a good and timely move for the interests of the university. But I believe it benefited the President himself more than Princeton, and was bestowed before he had earned it.

George Bush has a glittering political résumé, but his presidency is still amorphous, except for two offensive wars, and is without any clear vision for America's future, especially at home. The Bush Administration was teetering, and the President's future was in some doubt, until he led us into the Gulf War, a brilliant military endeavor, but one whose aftermath and ultimate outcome are both uncertain and profoundly disturbing. Little serious attention has been given to the welter of urgent domestic woes that most directly affect the most Americans: crime and punishment, drugs, the hungry and homeless, the deficiencies in education and health care, the bleeding urban hubs, the budget deficit, the S&L fiasco, the painful recession.

It would be best, in my view, if the decision to award an honorary degree to a president were not influenced by the euphoria surrounding a highly emotional, media-hyped war. Such a decision should take into account the broad range of a president's achievements. A great university like Princeton can afford to take the longer view, with neither need nor reason to join the postwar stampede.

WILLIAM H. RENTSCHLER '49
Lake Forest, Ill.

President Bush's choice of military power over diplomacy in the Near East will cost hundreds of thousands of lives. His position on the environment dooms future generations to clean up after us. And his decision to sell more arms to Middle Eastern nations lays the groundwork for the next "clean" war. Princeton in whose service? I do not understand.

More than a hundred years ago, Nietzsche wrote: "It is a shame and a disgrace that such nauseatingly obsequious flattery of the idols of the age could be uttered and repeated by presumably decent and intelligent people—proof that we no longer grasp the vast difference in seriousness between philosophy and a newspaper."

I have never before been deeply embarrassed by my Princeton connection.

Graduate Housing

Regarding your article on the university's opening of graduate housing to gay and unmarried couples (Notebook, May 15): it is now official that the university (our Princeton) has raised homosexual relationships to the moral level of, and acceptable equivalent to, real marriage. Princeton has opened the door for a homosexual graduate student to bring a non-student boyfriend (perhaps several) into university housing on the same basis as a wife. Further, our university contemplates offering health insurance to such a non-spouse/non-student with a high risk of AIDS, and will surely ask Annual Giving to subsidize the resultant runaway costs.

To Provost Paul Benacerraf '52 '60, the issue is one of high principle, i.e., "recognition of a different kind of [family] unit." The provost has said it straight: Princeton has now institutionalized the homosexual lifestyle.

A great many alumni believe in God and take it seriously when the Old Testament states that homosexuality is detestable and when the New Testament characterizes it as unnatural, indecent, and a perversion. How can believers in God and the authority of the Bible support a university that goes beyond mere approval and tacit support of homosexuality to underwrite a relationship that is morally wrong and offensive to God?

The provost was right about one thing. It is a matter of high principle.

WILLIAM R. MACIVLAINE '52
Naples, Fla.

While describing the additional costs to Princeton if same-sex couples are accorded the rights now enjoyed by married couples, your article on graduate housing states that one substantial cost would be the provision of health insurance "to non-students who may have a higher risk of developing AIDS." AIDS does not target a particular population, as originally suspected. Gays and lesbians are no more at risk than heterosexuals. Rather, in assessing susceptibility to AIDS, one should examine behaviors. Anyone who has oral, anal, or vaginal sex without a condom or other barrier puts himself or herself at risk. Similarly, intravenous drug-users who share unclean needles are at risk. The conduit for HIV (the virus that causes AIDS) is bodily fluids, not sexual orientation.

Perpetuating the idea that homosexuals are more at risk than heterosexuals is damaging in two ways. First, the classification can be used to isolate and condemn gays and lesbians. Second, it suggests that heterosexuals do not need to be a focus for education, prevention, and care. As the incidence of HIV and AIDS among college heterosexuals and homosexuals continues to grow, none of us can afford to believe that we are not at risk.

PAW reports that multibedroom housing in the Butler and Lawrence complexes, hitherto available only to married graduate students and their spouses, is now open to unwed cohabitantes and homosexual couples. What will these developments now be called? "Shady Shack-Up Acres" or "Fairlyland"?

The Old Tiger Nine

I couldn't believe my eyes when I saw my grandfather's photograph in the May 15 "From the Archives." The picture, unfortunately, is erroneously captioned as the 1863-64 Nassau Nine. My grandfather, Robert F. Little 1867, played on the 1865-66 and 1866-67 teams and was captain of the latter. A copy of the photo you published has been in my possession since 1940. I acquired it from my father, Robert F. Little, Jr. 1896. It gives the names and classes of the nine players on the 1865-66 team and does not mention any player with the surname Henry. They are, left to right, standing: John B. McPherson 1866, Little 1867, William H. Wickham 1866 (captain), George K. Ward 1869, and Edward A. Condit 1866. Seated: John H. McIlvaine 1866, W.H. Finley 1867, David B. Hunt 1866, and William J. Lyon 1867.

The Hogue Case

The case of James Arthur Hogue, the student who gained admission with a fraudulent application using the name Alexi Indris-Santana (PAW, April 3), is of special interest to me and my son, Stephen McNamara '55, for prior to his expulsion, "Indris-Santana" held a scholarship given by my father, Robert C. Stephen and I believe that my father would agree wholeheartedly with the sentiment, as expressed by Professor Giacinto Scoles in a letter in the issue of May 15, that Mr. Hogue deserves our sympathy. Like Professor Scoles, my father

Luce Scholars Program

Alumni/ae less than 30 years of age on September 1, 1992 are invited to apply for a Henry Luce Foundation professional internship to work in East or Southeast Asia for a year (August 1992-July 1993). The program is designed to broaden the scholars' professional perspectives and to sharpen their perceptions of Asia, America, and themselves. There are no language requirements. Specialists in Asian studies are specifically excluded from the program. Successful candidates include graduate and professional school students and working alumni/ae as well as graduating seniors.

Luce Scholars are placed in internships based on their individual career interests, experience, training, and general background. Recent recipients have been attached to an architectural firm in Tokyo, a forestry project in Indonesia, a newspaper in Hong Kong, a training facility for public administration in Malaysia, a program in community medicine in the Philippines, the banking authority in Singapore, and a family planning center in Taipei. The Luce Foundation provides a stipend adequate to cover living costs, as well as support for language instruction and all required travel.

Candidates are chosen without regard to sex, race, religion, marital status or need. Selections are made on the basis of a clearly defined career interest in a specific field, strong academic records (particularly in the field of specialized interest), and evidence of potential leadership and accomplishment. Application deadline: November 4, 1991. Contact Dean Diane Balestri, 408 West College, Princeton University, Princeton, NJ 08540. Telephone: (609) 258-5524. FAX: (609) 258-6371.

would not overlook the seriousness of Mr. Hogue's offenses. But he would not enter the fantasy world of might-have-beens, in which it is easily imagined that Mr. Hogue deprived some allegedly more worthy student, perhaps the child of an alumnus, of a place at Princeton. My father's concerns would focus on Mr. Hogue's present difficulties and his uncertain future. He would hope that the positive aspects of Mr. Hogue's Princeton experience, however obtained, could somehow—with the sympathy and encouragement of others—play a part in helping this bright and mixed-up young man to get on the right track for good.

Peter Putnam '46 *60

Ann Waldron's beautiful article "Brilliant Enigma," on the life of Peter Putnam '46 *60 (May 15), reminds us poignantly of the eternal truth—so well illustrated in the lives of Putnam, Jesus, and Gandhi—that true fulfillment comes only when we are willing to assume for ourselves the ways of the humblest worker. It is this willingness that permits us to give our excess wealth and energy to others and find our enjoyment in spirit and community. I rejoice that Peter taught me this lesson way back in the fifties. I pray that today's undergraduates still have contact with graduate students who are living in their hearts.

Gender-Speak

I see from your article on gender-inclusive language (On the Campus, May 15) that, twenty-plus years after coeducation, Princeton is still haggling over name tags. It all seems so needlessly bureaucratic. Take the flap over the term "freshman." Why not call rookies "freshmen" and "freshwomen"? "Freshperson" would be sophomoric, and as for "first-year student," forget it: leaden and "thoroughly departmental," to borrow from Robert Frost.

In sports, why not "defenseman" and "defensewoman"? If you insist on androgyny, you could also include "defender." The male head of an academic department is a "chairman," the female a "chairwoman." Once you start calling a department head a chair, a table, a floor wax, or a dessert topping, you're in trouble. Why not acknowledge that some students and faculty members are male and some female?

A co-winner of this year's Pyne Prize is quoted in favor of discontinuing the term "master" for the head of a residential college; she prefers "mentor." The reason? "Master" connotes slavery, and "language constructs reality." I think it's more likely to be the other way around. And in your typical bureaucracy, language conceals re-

Princeton University has the following positions available:

Assistant Director Alumni Council

Selected applicant will administer programs and services for alumni and their organizations, particularly for special interest groups, including undergraduate classes. You will identify, recruit and train volunteer leaders as well as organize, and implement workshops, conferences and other on and off campus volunteer activities. Travel required.

Strong communications and organizational skills and the ability to inspire and guide volunteers are required. In addition to an undergraduate degree, ability to work independently and within a group environment are essential as is the ability to prioritize. Exposure to computer systems is an asset.

Associate Director Planned Giving

Incumbent will be required to travel extensively to identify and solicit planned gift prospects; train development staff in PG concepts, coordinate volunteers, and office administration. Additionally, you will have stewardship of gifts.

Position requires previous charitable gift planning experience and knowledge of qualified charitable gift plans. A background in planned giving in the charitable sector, strong verbal and written communication skills and training in field(s) of law, marketing, accounting or finance is required. Past involvement in volunteer organizations, commitment to higher education necessary. Familiarity with Princeton University helpful.

We offer competitive salary and unique benefits package. Submit resume in confidence indicating position of interest no later than July 12 to: D. Johnson, Human Resources, Princeton University, Clio Hall, Princeton, NJ 08544.

ality. "Master" means an awful lot of things besides slave-owner, and there's something mildly obsessive about fixating on one archaic meaning of a term over all the other benign ones. Can you imagine the P.G.A. inviting golfers to the annual Mentors' Tournament, in Augusta, Georgia? What matters about the heads of residential colleges is not their titles but whether they are good people and effective in their jobs.

We are also told that the student government is considering changing the Honor Code to make sure it's not "male-oriented." So long as they don't decide it's too honor-oriented.

Life is too short to be constantly looking for offense where none is intended.

ROBERT W. COXE '69

The word "master" is derived from the Latin magister, meaning "teacher"; magister and its derivatives in several languages have been used for more than two thousand years to mean "teacher" or "person in authority in an educational institution." Thus, it strikes me as fantastic that an educated person could misunderstand the denotation or connotation of "master" in an educational context. Similarly, my advanced degree means that I am a teacher of the arts, and I am; never have I been mistaken for a slave-owner of the arts, patriarch of the arts, husband of the arts, lord and master of the arts, or someone with a socially constructed mandate to do violence to the arts.

ETAN SAVIR '83

Regarding the search for a gender-inclusive alternative to the word "freshman," I would like to make a suggestion. After Princeton, I attended Oxford, where the term "fresher" refers to a first-year student. The word is short, easy to say, and includes everyone.

He thought for a while and replied that, because I had always loved him, fed him, and cared for him, the appellation Master was perfectly acceptable. I

Mandatory Thesis

Regarding my essay on seminars and the mandatory senior thesis (PAW, March 20) and the many letters in response to it that appeared in your issue of May 15, I want to make two points.

First, I consulted no one in the university administration before writing the article. To my knowledge, all administrators are strongly opposed to making the thesis optional.

Second, the strength and depth of the opposition by alumni even to the possibility that an optional thesis might be worth discussing now convinces me that it was a mistake to suggest this. I had assumed that, given the option of writing a thesis, about three-quarters of a class would still do so. Apparently I was wrong. Alumni who object to the suggested change must have written their theses only under compulsion, but realized after completing them how much they had learned from the experience, and are forever proud of what they achieved. If this category is so large, then my proposal is obviously a bad one, and I renounce it.

If it is desirable to increase the range of educational options at Princeton by offering more seminars—and I think it is—then some other way must be found to make this possible.

Heisman Winners

The article on athletes' graduation rates in the Ivy League in the May 15 PAW incorrectly states that Dick Kazmaier '52 is the league's only winner of the Heisman Trophy. Pre-Coed Princeton Daniel N. White '65's anti-nostalgic essay on pre-coed Princeton (First Person, May 15) evokes with rare accuracy the occasional highs and ample lows of what was called social life in those days, and not just at Princeton. I'd like to believe it made better people of us, but I doubt it.

Ivy Schools Settle Antitrust Case, Give Up Financial-Aid Conclave

TO AVOID A LEGAL battle that would have pitted them against the Justice Department's antitrust division, the eight Ivy League universities have agreed to cease sharing information about financial-aid applicants and other practices associated with the New England Overlap Group. In late May, the schools signed a consent decree that ended a two-year investigation of the way they set financial-aid awards, tuition rates, and faculty salaries (PAW, April 17).

Representatives of the schools signed the consent decree the same day the Justice Department formally charged the Ivies and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with violating antitrust laws. The schools also promised not to set faculty salaries and tuition rates in concert (practices they have always denied). Attorney General Richard L. Thornburgh claimed that the Overlap discussions restrained "price competition," and had made them the focus of the investigation. The schools have maintained that the similarities in tuition rates result from free-market competition.

Although M.I.T. has decided to fight the charges in court, the agreement effectively closes the case for the Ivies, and means that the twenty-three-member Overlap Group, founded in 1956, will almost certainly dissolve. According to the agreement, schools may continue unilaterally to offer aid on the basis of need only, but they may no longer consult each other on any aspect of financial-aid policy.

"None of us feels good about the outcome," said Robert K. Durkee '69, Princeton's vice-president for public affairs. "All of us feel that the loss of Overlap damages our ability to assess the needs of students. But the consensus is that we would be in worse shape if we went to court." Not only would costs mount rapidly in a legal battle with the government, but, according to Durkee, any evidence presented in a federal case could provide fodder for private lawsuits alleging that the universities had colluded. In April, one Princeton official estimated that the university's investigation-related expenses had thus far amounted to $400,000.

Hoping to avoid such a trial altogether, the Ivies, represented most recently by lawyers for Columbia, Dartmouth, Harvard, and Yale, negotiated for months to settle the case. In mid-May, according to Durkee, the Justice Department suddenly demanded that the schools agree on the terms of a consent decree within ten days. "It was evident to us that the pressure to resolve it quickly was directly related to the plan of the attorney general to announce his candidacy for the Senate seat in Pennsylvania," Durkee said. "The indication was that he wanted to be able to point to the resolution of this investigation as one of his accomplishments as attorney general."

Overlap may be dead, but not necessarily buried. The university plans to lobby Congress either for legislation that permits Overlap discussions or for a reinterpretation of existing antitrust statutes. Because the bill that reauthorizes federal funding for higher education is due to be debated next year, the budget-conscious Congress may be receptive to the schools' argument that Overlap discussions allow universities to distribute their own need-based aid to the greatest effect. In the meantime, officials say, Princeton will continue to meet the full needs of the students it admits, and will gird itself, in some cases, to match higher offers of aid from other colleges. □

Lewis, Nobel Laureate in Economics, Dies at 76

SIR W. ARTHUR LEWIS, an emeritus professor of economics and co-recipient of the 1979 Nobel Prize in Economics for his work in the economics of the developing world, died June 15 in his home in Barbados. He was seventy-six.

Lewis taught at Princeton from 1963 until 1983, when he retired as the James S. McDonnell Distinguished University Professor of Economics and International Affairs. He was a leading authority in the field of economic growth and social change in developing countries, about which he published twelve books and more than eighty articles. At Princeton, he taught graduate and undergraduate courses in economic development and modern economic history. The only black Nobel laureate in economics, he shared the prize with Theodore W. Schultz "for their pioneering research into economic development with particular consideration of the problems of developing countries."

In an appreciation, The New York Times editorialized that Lewis distinguished himself from other Nobel laureates because "he immersed himself in the messy problems of actual economies. . . . Fellow laureates won for theoretical breakthroughs; Sir Arthur won for work that affected policy all through the third world."

Lewis never shrank from the challenge of adapting the mathematical verities of economic theory to the inconvenient realities of politics and social conditions in the third world. After receiving his higher education at the University of London, he taught there and then at the universities of Manchester and the West Indies. Before and during his tenure at Princeton, he served in many academic and governmental posts. He advised governments in the Caribbean and Africa, and was chancellor of Guyana University, director of the Central Bank of Jamaica, and president of the Caribbean Development Bank. As the Times said, Lewis "never forgot that economics was foremost about people."

Sir
Arthur
Lewis

BOOM TIMES OR BUST, PRINCETON reunions flourish. A record 5,800 alumni registered for the weekend, and they brought with them thousands of family members and friends. Indeed, the burgeoning numbers are beginning to strain the university's infrastructure. This year, the tenth and twentieth reunions outgrew their traditional sites, and the fifteenth, which reported a record attendance of 353, was bulging at the seams. According to Donald W. Altmaier '55, an assistant director of the Alumni Council, every year it is more difficult to accommodate all the large class meals in indoor venues around the campus. And, of course, the growing numbers of celebrants prompted a drastic rerouting of the P-rade this year.

The new P-rade route debuted to generally favorable reviews. The University Band and the twenty-fifth-reunion class led the way around the upper campus and down Elm Drive, followed by Arthur C. Holden '12, who, at 100, won the Class of 1923 Cane as the oldest returning alumnus for the fifth year in a row. The Class of 1926, seeking to outdo last year's fortieth-reunion class, showed off a handsome fleet of vintage automobiles.

The new route shaved about fifteen minutes off the length of last year's march. It probably would have been shorter still had anyone foreseen that the Class of '56's towering obelisk-cum-float, which shot orange tennis balls into the air, would have difficulty clearing the tree limbs shading Elm Drive.

Down at Poe Field, festive innovations greeted the ten to twelve thousand revelers. As they approached President and Mrs. Shapiro's reviewing stand, P-raders passed under a "triumphal entranceway," as officials called it, consisting of a helium-filled tiger-shaped balloon bobbing about twenty feet off the ground. For the young at heart, there were pony rides, clowns, jugglers, a steam calliope, and rides in a hot-air balloon. Unchallenged by the siren's song of the eating clubs along Prospect Avenue, the new route amply fulfilled the Alumni Council's stated aim of inducing more marchers to finish the P-rade and stay for the annual meeting of the alumni association. But ironically, all those P-raders used the occasion to continue their reunions, and the remarks of James C. Parham '52, the council's chairman, were nearly drowned out. According to Altmaier, the council may reconsider the meeting's place in the P-rade.

The reactions of alumni to the new, on-campus route ranged from enthusiasm to grudging acceptance. "Traditions get built up over time," said Norman D. Brown '61. "Five years from now, this will be the tradition." "It was good theater," said Landon Y. Jones '66, who, as managing editor of People magazine, should know. "I was ready to dislike it, but it was great—more intimate, more climactic."

Altmaier termed it a "learning experience." Next year, there will be greater efforts to draw townspeople, who have customarily watched from Prospect Avenue, onto the campus. The Alumni Council will also continue to seek a "triumphal entranceway" that strikes the right balance between dignity and festiveness. The gas-filled feline was not to everyone's taste: after the P-rade, knife-wielding assailants wearing Class of '91 beer jackets hacked up one paw, inflicting a thousand dollars in damage on the custom-made balloon.

The weekend was not, of course, wholly frivolous. The Class of '66 invited Ralph Nader '55, one of the founders of the Project 55 public-service organization, to offer advice on setting up a "Project 66." Later, Nader reflected on the changing nature of Princeton reunions. "I think brains are beginning to compete with beer," he said pithily, referring in part to the extensive series of lectures and panel discussions on social and other issues that now lend a more scholarly feeling to the weekend. "We're seeing a recognition of the alumni classes as a powerful force for change in this country, because of their sense of cohesiveness. I think the stereotype of reunions as a drunken sprawl is disintegrating."

Amid Pomp and Circumstance, '91 Graduates

PRINCETON'S 244TH COMMENCEMENT was nearly as notable for what didn't happen as for what did. Secretary of State James A. Baker III '52 was on hand to receive an honorary doctorate of laws, and no one protested. A month earlier, the award of an honorary degree to President Bush had prompted dissent from seven hundred students and professors, who averred that granting degrees to Bush and Baker amounted to an endorsement of the Gulf War. Yet none of the graduating students was seen to be sporting an armband or distributing leaflets. Only the reading of the citation for Neil L. Rudenstine '56's honorary doctorate prompted some booing—not because anyone had anything against the newly elected president of Harvard and former Princeton provost, but because the mention of the H-word provoked automatic, albeit tongue-in-cheek, displeasure.

As usual, seniors got to enjoy an inside joke at the expense of the non-Princetonian hoi polloi, punctuating the salutatorian's Latin address with cheers, jeers, and snickers according to the crib sheets in their programs. While Harold S. Reeves, a classics major from Cranford, New Jersey, wittily reminisced about that one last "iter nocturnum . . . ad Wawam" and poked fun at the new "Caesar alcoholicus Carolus Wartenburg" and the Holiday Inn, to which many grad students will be displaced next fall, visitors marveled at the class's command of the Roman tongue. Later, the valedictorian, Timothy Y. Chow, a mathematics major from Hong Kong, exhorted his classmates not to "strangle time," to use time well, in their future careers.

During the ceremony, the 655 men and 437 women of the graduating class received, among them, 931 bachelors of arts and 161 bachelors of science in engineering degrees. Of those, 488, or 44.7 percent, received some form of honors: 88 highest honors, 174 high honors, and 226 honors. In addition, 583 advanced degrees were conferred, including 244 doctors of philosophy, 216 masters of arts, 64 masters in public affairs, 36 masters of science in engineering, 18 masters of architecture, and 5 masters of fine arts.

On Class Day, the day before Commencement, the university presented awards to seniors for their outstanding academic and nonacademic accomplishments. The Harold W. Dodds '14 Award, in recognition of moral courage, went to Heather K. Gerken. Satana T. Deberry and Tracey A. Kinslow shared the Frederick Douglass Service Award, given to the senior who has "exhibited courage, leadership and intellectual achievement" and has contributed to "a deeper understanding of the experiences of racial minorities." Ingrid V. Eagly was awarded the W. Sanderson Detwiler '03 Prize, which goes to the senior who, in the opinion of his or her classmates, has done the most for the class.

Christopher J. "Kit" Mueller, the captain and star of the Ivy champion men's basketball team, won the Class of 1901 Medal for the senior who has done the most for the university. Mueller also shared the William Winston Roper '02 Trophy, the highest honor for a male athlete, with William T. Burke, an all-American runner and the co-captain of the men's track and field squad. Last February, he became the first Princetonian to break the four-minute mile. Mollie A. Marcoux, a four-year letter-winner in both soccer and ice hockey, was the C. Otto von Kienbusch '06 Sportswoman of the Year. The Class of 1916 Cup, presented to the varsity athlete with the highest academic standing at the end of senior year, was given to Robert J. Monroe, a molecular biology major who ran the 3,000 meters for the cross-country team.

Hahn, Bolster, Corson Honored with Alumni Service Awards

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Alumni Council, held on the Friday of Reunions, council chairman James C. "Poss" Parham '52 presented citations to three alumni for their service to the university and alumni. Honored were:

- Douglas H. Hahn '34, a retired executive at B. Altman & Co., who was cited for fifty-seven years of service—and still counting—as officer of his class, as president of several of the alumni associations in New Jersey, and as national chairman of Annual Giving. In keeping with Hahn's description of Princeton as a "life sentence," the citation noted that Hahn remains active as president of the recently resuscitated Alumni Association of Monmouth and Northeast Ocean Counties and as vice-president of his class. Parham declared Hahn's "probation" over, and then presented him with the "Alumni Council Award for Inescapable Service to Princeton."

- Joseph L. Bolster '52, the recently retired director of Annual Giving, who was cited for almost forty years of employment with the university. Bolster joined the university staff

"moments after receiving his A.B.," serving in the admission office, the office of student aid, and the athletics department, before embarking on a twenty-seven-year tenure with Annual Giving. During his directorship, A.G. raised $211 million; although Bolster attributes that success to his colleagues and volunteers, the citation read, "he has been the motive force behind—and beside—all these other Princetonians through the long years of their association."

- Virginia L. Corson '74, a genetics counselor at Johns Hopkins Hospital, who was cited for her leadership of the P.A.A. of Maryland and tenure on the Alumni Council. As a member of the university's second fully coeducational class, Corson played on the first women's basketball team and was the first female president of the University Band. After graduation, her extracurricular enthusiasm carried over into alumni affairs: she has organized young-alumni activities, recruited women as volunteers for the Schools Committee, and served as treasurer of the Alumni Council, "where her fabled attention to detail has stood us all in good stead."

of Music, Emeritus

To scholars, theorists, and critics, he is "Babbitt," an idealist whose thinking has forged a new conception of the musical mind. To musicians, students, composers, and performers, he is "Milton," a fierce advocate and loyal friend whose vision, patience, and persistence reinforce their determination to succeed, excel, explore, understand. Composer, teacher, theorist, writer: throughout a long and productive career, he has given the world new music, and in the process has enlarged our understanding of what music is and can be.

JAMES A. BAKER III '52
Doctor of Laws
United States Secretary of State

A born and raised Texan who, unlike his predecessor, is only figuratively a branded son of Princeton, he has forged a remarkable record of national leadership for over a decade. From White House chief of staff and secretary of the treasury to secretary of state, his tenure in public office has been marked by boundless energy, a deserved reputation for competent and unflappable determination, and an ability to build consensus behind important national goals. Lawyer, politician, and statesman, he has personified that familiar phrase, "Princeton in the Nation's Service."

Sociology, University of Chicago

His fertile and inventive mind has taken powerful economic theories from the realm of abstract thought and the province of explicit markets and brought them to bear elegantly and creatively on matters that touch our everyday lives: discrimination, marriage and divorce, child rearing, addiction, and even altruism. In every case, he has added something that others have not seen—thereby changing fundamentally the discipline of economics and adding greatly to its impact on our lives.

The Myth with a Thousand Faces

THE WORLD OF MYTH: AN ANTHOLOGY

David Adams Leeming '58 • Oxford University Press, $24.95

DAVID ADAMS LEEMING'S The World of Myth functions both as an anthology of myth and as a myth in its own right. It is not just a collection of fascinating stories of creation and destruction, gods and goddesses, heroes and tricksters; it is also an attempt to incorporate those stories into one of the most influential of modern myths—the myth of the collective unconscious and its universal archetypal language. The myths of Greeks and Romans, of ancient Hebrews and Christians, of Africans, Native Americans, Chinese, Indians, Polynesians, Egyptians, and Babylonians, are read as cultural variations on universal themes—individual moments in the universal dream of humankind. The book may be read and enjoyed at either level: as a rich anthology of remarkably diverse myths and legends from many cultures and religious traditions, or as an introduction to those universalist readings of myth that are associated with such figures as Carl Jung, Joseph Campbell, and Mircea Eliade.

Viewed simply as an anthology, The World of Myth is more culturally diverse than any other I know. While weighted somewhat in favor of those traditions that have contributed most directly to the intellectual and cultural inheritance of modern Europe and America—the Greco-Roman, Hebraic, and Christian traditions—the book contains copious examples of myths and legends from all areas of the world and all periods of history. Included under myths of creation, for example, are fragments of Egyptian cosmogonies; passages from the Mesopotamian Enuma Elish, the Book of Genesis, the Rig-Veda, the Bṛhadaraṇyaka Upaniṣad, Hesiod's Theogony, and the Gospel of John; stories from the American Hopis and the African Bantus; and, in a remarkable quotation from a modern scientific catechism, an instance of the mythological usage of the Big Bang theory as a source of meaning for human life. The goddess Gaia is represented not only in her ancient Greek form, but also as the personification of Mother Earth in the modern ecological myth created by the British scientist James Lovelock. The familiar stories of Zeus and Europa, Apollo and Daphne, Abraham and Isaac, Osiris and Isis, Samson, Krishna, and the fall of Troy are interspersed with the Apache tale of the Vagina Girls, accounts of the Irish hero Cuchulain and the African hero Wanjiru, Chinese and Mayan flood stories, tales of the Japanese goddess Amaterasu and the Polynesian goddess Pele, a Norse version of Armageddon, and a modern feminist reconstruction of the myth of Pandora. Even randomly choosing one or two tales as bedtime reading will fire one's imagination and create a thirst for more myths and more knowledge of the cultures and peoples who produced them. This is surely one of the goals of the author, who helpfully provides bibliographical guides to further reading.

As I have suggested, however, The World of Myth is not just a readable and stimulating collection of "myths from around the world." Professor Leeming has chosen his title well. He believes that myth constitutes a world of its own—a universe of meaning that transcends the contingencies of culture and history. Myth expresses in symbolic form, he suggests, humanity's common experience of possible sources of meaning and fulfillment in a universe pervaded by the threat of disorder. Given that "the essence of whatever it is to be human is as present in the Indonesian or Nigerian as it is in the Irishman or the Indian," the world of myth reveals "a pattern of archetypal motifs that are as universal as the physical characteristics we humans share." Archetypal images—the gods and goddesses, the heroes and sacred objects of myth—are "part of our common human heritage" and contain "information about our experience as human beings." Taken as a whole, he concludes, the world of myth reveals a unified structure of archetypal images that reflects the shape of humanity's common quest for wholeness and determines the essential meaning of any myth—the universal meaning that lies beneath the contingent cultural clothing.

This same structure supplies the organizing principle for Professor Leeming's book. Individual myths or parts of myths are abstracted from their historical, cultural, and literary contexts, and treated as variants of "The Myth of the Great Mother," "The Myth of the Dying God," or "The Myth of the Hero." Unfortunately, the effect for me is not a deepened sense of the meaning of the individual myths, but a sense of thinness and reduction. Combining the myths and legends of diverse cultures for universal themes and archetypal images would make sense to me only if I could accept the author's myth about myth. I see no reason to believe that there is such a thing as an omnipresent "essence of whatever it is to be human," and I am deeply suspicious of what I regard as premature flights from the particular to the universal. I read myths and legends precisely to gain an appreciation of the diversity of cultures and religious traditions. It is their irreducible particularity that I savor. While Professor Leeming would not have us ignore the historical and cultural particularity of myth, the very structure of his book and of his myth would tempt us to value the shadows of universal archetypes over the substance of particular myths.

One of the blurbs on the dust jacket of The World of Myth says, "David Leeming is a miracle worker. Out of the bewildering mass of world mythologies he has been able to create a monolith of myth." I agree with these words, but I see them as a criticism. It's possible to disagree with the thesis of a book, however, while admiring its clarity. I strongly recommend it to the general reader as the best practical introduction to archetypal analysis currently available. I shall return to it again and again—as one of the richest and most diverse collections of myths and legends I know.

MARGARET IN HOLLYWOOD

Darcy O'Brien '61

William Morrow, $20.95

HERE'S A CURIOUS MONGREL, a cross-breed of fiction mated with celebrity autobiography, that subset of literary entertainment that's often ghost-written and largely fabricated anyway. Darcy O'Brien's eighth book is even harder to categorize in that, as the dust jacket proclaims, it was "inspired by the memories and memorabilia of his movie-star parents." In fact, the coy-looking ingénue on the cover is none other than Marguerite Churchill—the author's mother, to whom the book is dedicated—in a vintage publicity still.

O'Brien's first novel, A Way of Life, Like Any Other, which won the Ernest Hemingway Award as the best first novel of 1978, was, if I recall correctly, inspired by his memories of growing up as the son of George O'Brien and Marguerite Churchill. Halliwell's Filmgoer's Companion describes George O'Brien as an "American cowboy star who entered films as stunt man." His first starring role was in The Iron Horse (1924), and among his other pictures were Sunrise, She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, and Cheyenne Autumn. Marguerite Churchill, "Pert American leading lady of the thirties," starred opposite John Wayne and Tyrone Power in The Big Trail (1930) and then in Dracula's Daughter and opposite Boris Karloff in The Walking Dead. Margaret in Hollywood ends with the narrator referring to the filming of a large-scale Western called The Oregon Trail, "which opened up all those other wonderful roles with which I assume most of you are familiar, or you would not have opened this book." Among the "other wonderful roles" was a remake of Dracula.

O'Brien's heroine and narrator is an actress named Margaret Spencer, and the tale she tells is more about her passage to Hollywood than her actual stay there. Her travel agent and tour guide on this journey—no pleasure trip, but rather a forced march—is her mother Alice, an early prototype of that most unattractive of species, the Stage Mom. In deference to her theatrical background, Margaret tells her story in three acts: a relatively happy childhood in Kansas City, Buenos Aires, and Manhattan while her father is still alive; a period of modeling in New York; and a career of acting on stage and film. Her father is E. P. Spencer, a dapper and loving theatrical producer who teaches his daughter to appreciate the finer things in life, but when he dies nearly penniless, his embittered widow seizes upon the beautiful Margaret as her most valuable asset. After Alice sells off everything else, she sells Margaret, too. She withdraws her from school, forces her to model in dreadful conditions under "brutal lights" (at first clothed, eventually nude), and locks her into a Hollywood contract that swindles her but provides her mom with money to throw away on the Julian Petroleum Corporation scam (a true scandal). "It was as if in a matter of a few days or weeks I went from being her daughter to becoming her employee—but that was an analysis of which I was incapable at the time," Margaret comments.

Darcy O'Brien '61

Alice's deranged power play, and the bizarre dynamic between mother and daughter, is the true focus of O'Brien's novel. Their pitched battles, set against the background of generally convincing period details from the advent of talkies, are engrossing. But what's frustrating to the reader is that although Margaret is rebellious and resourceful (particularly when it comes to her many love affairs, which begin in early adolescence), she isn't wily enough to outmanipulate her mother (despite her earning clout) and remains relatively powerless. Alice is depicted as such a relentless ogress that it's hard to believe Margaret's attempts to break free are so half-hearted. One Christmas, for example, Margaret's maternal grandmother, who is almost as evil and parasitic as Alice, receives a mink jacket bought with two weeks of Margaret's hard-earned salary. When the grandmother complains that she really wanted a car, and Alice agrees, Margaret, enraged at the ingratitude, greed, and collusion, storms out with the only present she received—a Mission-Pak basket of fruit—and throws it under the wheels of a truck. She hopes her mother and grandmother have been watching from the window—as if this would be enough to get even with them!

It's no wonder the reader is skeptical and bemused when, at the end of this saga of "mutual dependency," Margaret professes: "I am not only not in the least bitter, I consider myself one of the happiest people on the face of the earth. . . . No, I was a lucky girl to have had such a conniving, greedy mother." Isn't this sort of disclaimer pro forma for the star-bio—first you take revenge by trashing your target, then you come off smelling like a rose by denying any ill feelings? The problem is, once Margaret gains her hard-won independence, the details get scanty. The least vivid section of the book is the part that takes place in Hollywood. Margaret never seems happy and fulfilled to an extent that would justify her assertion or make the reader believe that this confession is anything but a settling of scores. And what's never clear is whether O'Brien meant to write a straightforward account of the rocky road to fame of one fatherless starlet of that era, a ghost-written autobiography of his mother, or an ironic take on the whole genre of such retrospectives.

With Speed and Pitching, Tigers Claw Their Way Back to League Title

"THREE AND OH the count on the batter. Runners on second and third, Princeton down by one. Here's the windup and the delivery... it's a high fly ball to deeeeeeep right field! That ball is going... going... that ball is—" Uh, hold it. Let's try this again.

"One and two on Tim Taylor. Two men in scoring position for the Tigers' freshman third baseman. Here's the pitch... slap single the other way! One run will score, the runner from second trying for home. Here's the throw—it's... not in time! Princeton comes from behind yet again!"

Now that's more like it. That first excerpt could have come from a Princeton baseball broadcast circa 1985, the last time the Tigers won the Eastern Intercollegiate Baseball League title and advanced to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament. That team, as Coach Tom O'Connell puts it, "had some good long-ball threats." But over the last two years, O'Connell has recruited a different breed of player: quicker, light hitting, better suited to Princeton's capacious Clarke Field, which is bigger than four major-league ballparks. Of the nine batters in the regular lineup this season, seven batted .284 or better, and six had at least six stolen bases.

"Last year, we started to change it, and then we got some freshmen in who continued the process," says O'Connell, whose Tigers this season made their second N.C.A.A. tournament appearance in his ten years as head coach—and only their third appearance ever. "Our ballpark is a very large field, and there's no way that we're going to hit the ball out of there. So we have to get some people who are going to move runners, steal bases, hit and run, bunt, and do the things necessary." This season, Clarke Field saw just three home runs, only one by a Princeton player. As a team, Princeton hit but seven all season.

The 1985 Tigers, a team that clouted twenty-one homers, finished with the most victories in one season in Princeton history—twenty-nine. But all that power didn't translate into a single win in the double-elimination N.C.A.A. tournament. The 1991 Tigers (24-22 overall; 14-4 E.I.B.L.) earned their berth in the tournament by sweeping their way to the E.I.B.L. title. Princeton won the last six games of its league schedule, with doubleheader sweeps of Cornell, Harvard, and Dartmouth. In all these games, the Tigers seized early leads, and then held on with good late-inning pitching, which had frequently eluded them earlier in the season.

Kevin Butterfield '92 shut down the Big Red, 5-0, and then came back three days later to throw six strong innings against Harvard, giving up one run on two hits. After freshman David Kahney allowed the Crimson two runs in the top of the seventh and final inning, Brian Zirlin '91, the Tigers' left-handed closer for the last four seasons, came on to preserve the 4-3 victory with a strikeout.

That save, Zirlin's first of the season, demonstrated how far Princeton had come since a woeful trip to Florida in March, during spring break. The Tigers held a lead in ten of their eleven games down south, but the pitching faltered.

Six times Princeton's opponent won the game in its final at-bat, and Zirlin was the culprit in half of those losses. So the Tigers returned north with a 3-8 record and only an 11-2 victory over nationally ranked Missouri as a consolation.

In Princeton's first league contest, a doubleheader against Yale in New Haven, Zirlin again failed to hold a lead, and the Tigers lost, 4-3. Their chances for a third consecutive twenty-win season, not to mention the E.I.B.L. crown, seemed dim.

But in the second game against the Elis, Princeton took a "thanks-I-needed-that" smack in the head and turned things around. With Butterfield on the mound, Yale infielder Bill Asermely lined a fastball back up the middle—right at Butterfield's head. For once the Tigers caught a break: Asermely's ball struck the brim of Butterfield's cap instead of his face.

"He hit that ball a ton," says Butterfield, who needed a new cap to continue

Kevin Butterfield '92 saw double duty in 1991: as the lefty ace, picking up four of the team's fourteen league victories, and as the designated hitter, batting .355.

Who are The Friends of Princeton Football?

The Friends of Football are alumni and non-Princetonians who work in close conjunction with the coaches and administration in a wide variety of efforts dedicated to the preservation and improvement of Princeton's long football tradition.

Why such a group?

Budgetary restrictions imposed by economic realities during the past decade have curtailed the support available to Princeton football. The establishment of The Friends of Football has made available supplementary support designed to keep the program viable and competitive.

What do The Friends provide?

Friends, officers and members provide both financial and "in kind" aid to the coaches and administration. Examples include career nights, a senior picnic, the post-season team banquet, awards, and recruitment funding such as campus visitations by prospective student-athletes.

We welcome your membership in the Friends of Princeton Football in 1991-92. To join, just clip and mail the form below with your donation.

During the past four seasons, Princeton has ranked as one of the most consistent winning programs in the Ivy League.

Under coach Steve Tosches' guidance, the Tigers have posted a 22-17-1 overall slate during that time. Just two victories separate Princeton from the No. 1 position, and only Yale (24) and Cornell (23) have more victories than the Tigers since 1987.

Despite a disappointing season in 1990, there is a silver lining in the clouds for the Princeton football program. After a sub-.500 finish in 1986, the Tigers rebounded to become the only team in the Ivy League to post three consecutive overall winning seasons in 1987, 1988 and 1989. The Orange & Black capped off the 1989 season with a share of its first Ivy League title in 20 years. In addition, the 1990 freshman football team posted a 5-1 record; therefore, the Tigers can count on an influx of talented newcomers to join the varsity this season.

Princeton's chances at another strong rebound lie with an experienced defensive unit, a battle-tested offensive line and plenty of young talent on offense. The 1990 season included several near-misses. Four of Princeton's seven losses were by margins of five or less points.

The 1991 schedule offers a balanced home-and-away arrangement, with games at Palmer Stadium every other weekend. Not to be overlooked, however, are the defending Ivy co-champions, Cornell and Dartmouth, which loom as imposing bookends to the Tigers' schedule. Princeton will open the season at home against the Big Red on Sept. 21 and close out the campaign in Hanover, N.H., against the Big Green on Nov. 23.

the game. "I was laying there thinking, 'Well, I'm going to lose consciousness in about five seconds, and then they're going to take me off the field.'" The southpaw not only stayed on the field, but retired the next eight batters. He went on to post a 4-1 record and compile a 1.39 earned-run average against league opponents this season.

Like Butterfield, Princeton caught fire, winning thirteen of its remaining sixteen games in the league and steadily squashing all rival claims to the title. In five of the Tigers' next nine games after the Yale twinbill, the team came from behind to win. During that streak, Princeton staged a late-inning, seven-run rally that tied the score against Columbia, and then downed the Lions in extra innings, 12-11. After the E.I.B.L. season ended, Princeton snatched four more come-from-behind wins from non-league opponents.

Notwithstanding their late-game finesse, the Tigers traveled to Orono, Maine, in mid-May for the N.C.A.A.'s Atlantic regional tourney with the fewest victories of any school in the forty-eight-team field. The Tigers' first-round opponents were the Clemson Tigers (56-8), who entered the tournament with the nation's highest winning percentage and averaging the most runs per game (almost ten). In the regular season, fourth-ranked Clemson had blasted 105 home runs, and in this battle of the Tigers, the southern breed clobbered two more to power past Princeton, 13-5.

The next day, Towson State's Rob Lynch baffled the Tigers, 5-0, with the first complete-game shutout of his career, and Princeton became the first team to be eliminated from the tournament this year.

The Tigers have never won a game in the N.C.A.A.s. They can, however, look forward to another shot next year. Only two pitchers and right fielder Richey Nash graduated in June. (The San Diego Padres drafted Nash in the fifty-sixth round.) With the departure of Nash, the only Tiger who hit more than one home run this season, the transformation of the team will be complete: O'Connell will have to rely solely on speed, timely hitting, good defense, and solid pitching in 1992. But this combination of talents, much like those that made the St. Louis Cardinals perennial contenders in the 1980s, could be enough for Princeton to be going, going, gone to the N.C.A.A.s for a second straight year.

Spring Sports Wrap-up

THE MEN'S LACROSSE team (12-3 overall; 5-1 Ivy) ended its season in the most dramatic way possible: in an exhilarating quarterfinal match in the N.C.A.A. tournament, the third-seeded Tigers were upset, 14-13, by eleventh-seeded Towson State in sudden-death triple overtime. Towson State's Lindsay Dixon scored the winning goal fourteen seconds into the third four-minute overtime period. The game, played May 19 in Palmer Stadium, marked Princeton's second consecutive tournament appearance after many years of losing records.

After scoring the first goal of the game, Princeton fell behind and was forced to play catch-up the rest of the afternoon. Towson State jumped out to a 7-4 lead at halftime. But led by attackman Justin Tortolani '92, who tallied five times on the day, and freshman goalkeeper Scott Bacigalupo, who stopped twenty shots, Princeton fought back to tie it up at thirteen late in the fourth period and force the match into overtime.

The laxmen had finished second to Brown in the Ivy League and ended up ranked third in the nation. The team capped its successful season with a slew of honors. Five Tigers were among the seventy all-Americans. Bacigalupo, who was also chosen the Ivy League Rookie of the Year, was named to the second team. Defensive midfielder Mike Mariano '92 and defenseman David Morrow '93 were named to the third team, while Tortolani and attackman Andy Moe '92 earned honorable mention. Four Princetonians, Bacigalupo, Moe, Morrow, and Tortolani, were selected for the Ivy League's first team, the most since 1961. In addition, defenseman David Gaines '92, attackman Kevin Lowe '94, and Mariano were named to the second team. Greg Waller '92, a midfielder and Princeton's face-off specialist, earned honorable mention. In mid-June, Tortolani was elected an academic all-American.

The WOMEN'S LACROSSE team (11-6 overall; 4-4 Ivy) lost its bid for a berth in the N.C.A.A. tournament when it dropped the championship game of the East Coast Athletic Conference tournament to Yale, 5-4. A day earlier, in the tourney's opening round, the Tigers had avenged an early-season loss to Brown by beating the Bears, 7-5. The team's overall record is misleading: its six defeats were by a cumulative margin of fourteen goals. Seniors Marge Adams and Phyllis Fogarty, juniors Gillian Thomson and Kate Thurlow, and sophomore Gillan Wheelock were named regional all-Americans; Adams and Fogarty were also selected for the first team all-Ivy.

The SOFTBALL team (32-13-1 overall; 7-1 Ivy) closed out its Ivy championship season with a doubleheader against Adelphi. In the first game, freshman ace Lisa Moore one-hit the Panthers, 5-0, but the second game was called as darkness fell with the score tied at one. Moore finished the season with twenty wins and eight losses, a 0.71 earned-run average, and 212 strikeouts. Despite winning the Ivy title, the team was ranked third in the Northeast, behind Connecticut and Massachusetts, and so failed to win a place in the N.C.A.A. tournament. Moore, team captain Lori Dickerson '91, and third baseman Leslie Silverman '92 were named regional all-Americans;

Moore, Dickerson, outfielder Steph Detlefsen '92, and designated hitter Stacie Bonner '93 made the league's first team.

Once again, the MEN'S TENNIS squad (14-5 overall; 8-1 E.I.T.A.) went into its season-ending showdown with Harvard with an undefeated record in the league;

Attackman Kevin Lowe '94 eluded opposing defenders all season; his thirty-eight assists led the Tigers and broke a forty-year-old Princeton record for assists in a season.

once again, the team came up short, as the Crimson won decisively, 7-2, and earned a spot in the N.C.A.A. tournament. Most of the matches were close, however, and junior Greg Hartch, playing at no. 1, came from behind to defeat Albert Chang, Harvard's no. 1, in three sets. Chang nevertheless managed to grab the last slot in the N.C.A.A.'s regional singles competition. Hartch, Andy Weiss '93, and Greg Finck '91 earned all-league recognition.

The WOMEN'S TENNIS team (9-5 overall; 4-3 Ivy) could not retain its 1990 league championship, and finished in a tie for fourth. Brown won its first Ivy championship ever in a sport that has always been dominated by the Big Three. In June, Princeton lost its best player, senior captain Lauren Fortgang, to graduation, but on the bright side, nearly the whole team will return next year. Fortgang earned all-Ivy honors in both singles and doubles (with junior Aila Winkler).

Bill Burke '91, Princeton's first sub-four-minute miler and the co-captain of the MEN'S TRACK AND FIELD squad, closed out a remarkable collegiate career with a sixth-place finish in the 1,500 meters at the N.C.A.A. championships, in Eugene, Oregon. His time of 3:40.78 was his best of the season, and earned him all-American status. High jumper Jay Richards '92 finished in a tie for ninth.

In CREW, Princeton's three flagship squads finished with a fifth place and two no-shows at national regattas. Both the women's varsity and men's heavyweight squads elected not to travel to Cincinnati for the Nationals. The men's lightweight crew competed in the Intercollegiate Rowing Association regatta, in Syracuse, and placed fifth. Competing at the same regatta, the freshman eight topped a thirteen-crew field to win the Stewards Cup. □

ARTHUR C. HOLDEN
Box 182
Washington, CT 06793; 203-868-7063

The 79th annual meeting of the Class of 1912 occurred at this year's Reunions. The oldest graduate of classes present was L'il Arthur Holden who won the Class of 1923 cane for the fifth time, at the age of over 100 years for the first time.

The youngest of the progeny of the Class present was Whitney Talcott, grandson of Bill Whitney, and Whitney Talcott's wife. The progeny who assembled on the terrace at Forbes College after the P-rade numbered 16. There were two other couples who could not return for the meeting of the progeny. L'il Arthur especially regrets that Bef Gordy, who is his senior by over a year, was unable to get to Princeton for the reunion. Adrienne DellaPenna '88 carried the 1912 banner for the sixth time. She was accordingly admitted to the assembly of the progeny held after the P-rade.

The new route of the P-rade, terminating at Poe Field, was to all appearances, an encouragement to the interesting accessories characteristic of the many classes represented. There is little doubt that Princeton has developed a P-rade and Reunions technique which has been surpassed by no other university in the United States.

Rev. Alison R. Bryan and wife, Edith, along with daughter Helen and her husband, represented the Class of 1913 at Reunions this year. They enjoyed the Old Guard Luncheon at the Chancellor Green Rotunda.

Ellen Dudley Morrell, widow of Franklin Morrell, died Apr. 29, 1991. We have received word that Dorothy Jones Clark, widow of Honorary Classmate John Clark, died recently.

C. EARL MOORE
Rosemont Plaza, Apt. 117

One of the pleasant rewards of compiling Class notes is receiving letters of gratitude from undergraduates to whom scholarships have been awarded. Here is an example of such a letter, received from Stephanie L. Batiste '94, whose home is in California.

"I have been informed that the Hobart Amory Hare Baker Memorial Scholarship has supplied funds for my education at Princeton. I am writing to express my gratitude and to let you know a bit about how my year has been.

"As a first-year student from California, I did not know what to expect from my experiences of going to school and living on the East Coast for the first time. I was very nervous and terribly disoriented at first, but as I met people and became familiar with the campus, I felt much more at home. And now Princeton has become my home. Because of the new things I've done and learned here I have come to feel completely comfortable.

"The academic material has been challenging. I've become involved in the creative writing and drama programs. BLOOD WEDDING and DREAM

SNATCHER are two plays I had small roles in during the spring term, and I hope to continue with my acting in future semesters. I enjoyed attending basketball games—watching as Princeton surprised teams all over the country with its stellar defense. I also attended my very first hockey game at Baker Rink. My nerves and ears were shot by the time it was over, but I had a ball.

I've learned a lot about myself and my interests since I have been here, and I've grown up a little. I'd like to thank you for helping to make this all possible. I honestly cannot picture myself at any other school. Princeton seems to be the place for me. I am looking forward to my next three years here."

Word has been received from William J. C. Hughson '47 that his mother, Mildred Hughson, widow of our classmate Walter Hughson, died June 5, 1991, in Maine. She was 101 years old.

Notice has been received that George Kassler, former secretary of the Class of 1914, died May 4, 1991. A memorial will appear in a later issue.

ICE GRAMMER, c/o Chemical Bank
30 Rockefeller Plaza, Ste. 6100
New York, NY 10112

We were blessed with ideal weather for our 74th reunion and an excellent representation of '17ers at the Old Guard Luncheon. Attending were Ike Grainger and his son, Victor; Steve Hirsch; Whit Landon; Arch Crossley's daughter, Helen; Phyllis Schofield, our treasurer; and the following members of Kent Colwell's family: his widow, Pam, his son, Dave Colwell '51, who was celebrating his 40th reunion, along with his wife, Edna, and his two sons, Joshua and Lincoln, our faithful standard-bearers in the P-rade. Following the luncheon, Whit Landon walked the entire route of the P-rade, followed by Steve Hirsch and Ike Grainger in golf carts to the tumultuous cheers of the thousands who lined the route. Ike was elected president of the Class for the ensuing year.

The Greater Harrisburg (Penn.) Assn. of Realtors honored Evan Miller at its recent annual dinner. Evan was president for 12 terms of this 75-year-old organization and has now been elevated to "realtor emeritus" rank. 1917 salutes our fellow classmate on this distinguished honor.

We are saddened to report the passing earlier this year of Reece Obersteuffer's widow. She had resided in Grosse Pointe, Mich., for many years.

We have received letters of appreciation from the following awardees of 1917 scholarships: Jennifer C. Lublin, a recipient of the Harvey Lawrence Cory War Memorial Scholarship. She graduated in June and plans to go on to medical school. Deborah N. Peikes, a junior and a recipient of the Cabell Brockmridge Ten Eyck War Memorial Scholarship, is majoring in the Woodrow Wilson School and earning a certificate in Latin American Studies.

1917 does indeed appreciate these letters of gratitude, and we are very much impressed with the aspirations, academic programs, and variety of extracurricular and sports activities being pursued by these students. We wish you all a pleasant summer and hope you will send news of yourself and your families to be included in the Class notes when the ALUMNI WEEKLY resumes its publication schedule in mid-September.

JARVIS CROMWELL
Hightstown, NJ 08520

As of mid-June 1991, it appears that there are 15 stalwart members of 1918 who are very much with us and receiving and reading this column. The roster reads as follows: Laurence Anderson of Hightstown, N.J.; Albert Bingham of Sedro-Wooley, Wash.; Lee Bradley, Birmingham, Ala.; Lucius Butts, Natchez, Miss. (see below); Jarvis Cromwell, Hightstown, N.J.; John Droban, Woodside, N.Y.; John Elliot, Bethesda, Md.; Thomas English, Atlanta, Ga.; Barrett Green, Seattle, Wash.; Daniel Matthews Jr., Vincentown, N.J.; Mercier Parker, Laguna Beach, Calif.; Stacy Rankin, Palm Beach, Fla.; Harding Roche, Short Hills, N.J.; Donald Sberred, Pinehurst, N.C.; and Tsang-Yu Wu of San Francisco, Calif. If any of you have any corrections—especially additions—to this list, or any other information of any kind, please send same to Jarvis's designated batter, Alan Kirk, at 827 Turkey Run, McLean, VA 22101.

Thank goodness that there are such thoughtful and caring people as Mrs. Thomas Reed of Natchez, Miss. Out of the blue comes a lovely letter from one of the many friends of our dear classmate, Lucius Butts. She writes simply because she wanted to note what a grand person Lucius is. He is, she tells us, "Still active, walking very straight and tall, quietly giving to people in need—a fine, courtly gentleman 94 years old and a credit, really, to Lawrenceville and Princeton. . . . He has led an honorable and upright life, doing right by his family, his community, and his church." Mrs. Reed next writes: "(Don't these sound like old fashioned virtues)" Yes, they do, and they are, but they are as sound today, and certainly more in need, as they ever were. The letter closes with a mention of Lucius's being a "concerned citizen of the world who stays very much abreast of the times." Lucius, we salute you!

SALLY S. McALPIN W'20
Princeton, NJ 08542

What is essential for the individual who wishes to survive the Princeton P-rade? Is it patience, or a strong throat, or just endurance? No; it is a stout pair of legs. Several members of 1920 lacked this important equipment, so we were represented only by Nelson Dane, not too well legged himself, accompanied by a grandson, Dane W. Wells, and your secretary. Careful planning of the P-rade by placing the 25th reunion at the head, having many marshals waving us on, and keeping the route within the University limits, cut the P-rade time by half an hour. A welcome achievement. We wriggled around Nassau Hall and through East Pyne, then right, right again, and left, coasting down past the tennis courts to Poe Field and the reviewing stand.

George Bush was the fifth President of the United States to receive an honorary degree from Princeton University. He was preceded by Hoover, Truman, Johnson, and then Eisenhower, while he was still our commander-in-chief. On May 10, 1991, President Bush joined this distinguished company.

May I quote Princeton's first lady, at a luncheon of three. She remarked how much President Bush enjoyed receiving his honorary degree in Nassau Hall beforehand. Sally mentioned how lucky it was that Mrs. Bush was so relaxed. Mrs. Shapiro promptly replied, "She never for a second takes her eyes off her husband."

Here is a strange tie-in with the King of Jordan.

Jim Douglas's second wife, Elinor, was godmother to a young American girl who became the bride of the King of Jordan.

How did Ivy get such good publicity in the N.Y. Times about the welcoming of women? It pointed out the future difficulty in the Ivy song, "Sons of Ivy, We," then took only a few digs at "exclusiveness."

Charles Cameron writes me: "Thanks for your nice letter. It was good of you and I appreciate it. I trust that things are going well with you."

We are sad to tell you of the death of Courtlandt Otis. Your secretary wishes all seventeen of you a reasonably pleasant summer, all we can expect at our age. Please, in early August share your best moments with your secretary (P.O. Box 670, Princeton, NJ 08542) so we can bow with a flourish in mid-September.

We have a memorial in this issue.

A. EDWARD CONOVER
331 Lower Dolington Rd., Apt. C-4
Newtown, PA 18940

This was the year when the weather made news—good news. It was perfect and very appropriate for '21's 70th. It seems that it is never too late to break old records. Did I say "break"? I meant "smash." According to my files, which, admittedly, don't go back too far, I can't find any class that came near to having eight classmates and three widows back for their 70th reunion!

The stalwarts this year were: Ben Benua, who flew from Columbus, Ohio, wheelchair not withstanding; Treasurer Fran Bowman, with nephew Eric and wife; Secretary Ed Conover with daughter Joyce; V.P. Don Foresman, driven by son Bruce '57 from Cape Cod; President Chas Haines, honorary member Stan Katz with Adrea; V.P. Watt Matthews, who flew up from that historic Texas ranch; and our Princeton hosts, Class Agent Tom Roberts and Kay. We were also graced by the presence of three Class widows: George Berry's Mariana, John Davis's Maude, and Helmie Leb's Eleanor.

The group started to gather about ten o'clock at the Roberts' Princeton home. After many enthusiastic greetings we remembered the 25 classmates who have left us since our 65th reunion and extended best wishes to those who were physically unable to be with us on this memorable occasion. President Haines then congratulated all those present who had made it to our 70th and followed with a few remarks about his experiences with that motto "Princeton in the Nation's Service."

With a certain amount of ride-sharing and shuttling, we all made it to the Chancellor Green Rotunda for lunch as guests of the University and members of the Old, Old Guard. Six of us joined the P-rade, five in golf carts and our young honorary member striding along. We all thoroughly enjoyed the cheering and waving along the new route. So endeth our 70th reunion as we all departed to look forward to our 75th—better make that "our 71st."

Hearty birthday greetings to Cubby Beard, 91 on Sept. 3; Mac Kelley, 93 on Aug. 2; John McCaull, 93 on Aug. 30; and Art Stull, 93 on Aug. 28.

Arnold Wood's widow and longtime Co-Reunion Chairman, Lambie, has moved from Little Silver, N.J. to R.R. 4, Box 238-A, Montrose, PA 18801.

Rhea Dulles's widow, Marion, died early this year.

Just as the P-rade was getting started an alumnus of the early 1930s stopped by and discovered that I had been his scout master back in 1925 or so. In the confusion I am not sure of his name or address and would like very much to hear from him.

JACK REYNOLDS, JOHN CARTIER '60
103 East 84th St.
New York, NY 10028

The mother of all Alumni P-rades took place on Sat., June 8, 1991. The weather was fantastic and we followed a new "on campus" route that was more compact. Our "five horse-men" (Lewis, Maull, Scholl, Heller, and Scarff) ably represented the Class. The Old Guard Luncheon before the P-rade included our five horsemen as well as Jack Reynolds and Flora Maull. (Pictured are Scholl and Scarff.)

Both Iris Scarff and Adiene Meyer joined the above at the Class dinner on Friday. It was a great weekend.

I am sorry to report that Ed DeContingb, our Class agent, suffered a fatal heart attack May 5. His perfect 51-year Annual Giving record is a wonderful example for all. In addition, Struve Hensel died May 27. Struve had prepared the Class obituaries for many years. Both of these leaders will be sorely missed.

We are beginning to make plans for our 70th reunion. The Class officers want to maintain our excellent major reunion record regarding attendance and Annual Giving. Classmates, wives, widows, children, and other relatives will be contacted during the coming year to discuss our goals.

LISEY GOOD
201 W. Evergreen Ave., Apt. 716
Philadelphia, PA 19118

Princeton was blessed with one of the prettiest weekends of the year for Reunions 1991. Representing the Class at the festivities were Don Griffin, Betty Gorman, Anna Bell Phillips, Betsy and Alan Carrick, and Class Secretary Lisey Good. Tom Mutch brought his daughter Elizabeth Thomas, and Nancy and Esmond Gardner arrived wearing (and twirling) matching tiger tails!

All were present at Saturday's Old Guard Luncheon to see the Class of 1923 Old Guard Cane awarded to 100-year-old Arthur C. Holden '12. The cane, designed by Jim Hardin, was first awarded in 1951, and honors the oldest member of the oldest class present at Reunions.

Our own Don Griffin was part of a four-generation contingent. Along with Don were son James Q. Griffin '55, grandchildren Cynthia Griffin '86 and Barbara Griffin Cole '82, and Barbara's husband, Christopher Cole '81, and their baby!

We regret to report the death of Patrick Carlisle Beattie Nov. 1, 1990, and of Maccauley Carter Mar. 14, 1991. We have memorials in this issue.

RICHARD H. HOBBS
Wilmette, IL 60091

Attendance at our 67th reunion was small, but joy was unbounded. Present at Hon. Bobbie Emeny's delightful Friday evening dinner were Dorothy and Dick Hobbs, Winnie and Jim Cutting, Ran Dunning, Hubert Alvea, Dorothy and Paul Barringer, Marjory Cuyler, Louise Barbar (Jim's daughter), Marion Tuttlebell and two daughters, Anne Wishard and Patricia, and granddaughter Diana Wishard.

Most attended the Old Guard Luncheon and enjoyed the new "all campus" P-rade route, dinner and the Triangle show Saturday evening, and, finally, a Sunday curry tiffin at the Barringers.

The highlight of our reunion was the presentation to our famous classmate, Hubert, a bronze plaque (pictured) which noted his exceptional career as a scientist and teacher.

Ginnie and Ridenour Raymond have returned from a wonderful cruise that included Newfoundland, Iceland, Norway, and Denmark. They had dinner recently with Charlotte and Perry Raab and also with Martha and Dick Morebouse, who had celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary with a luncheon party given by their children. Fred Moble is almost proud that the skin cancer from which he is recovering is of such a rare type that doctors are clamoring for an examination. Carol and Otis Graesser report that he is recovering very slowly from the complete hip operation he had last fall and that walking is a problem. The *Ted Klumpp*s live on a farm in the beautiful Piedmont area of Charlottesville, Va. They are well and have two daughters nearby. Perry Koebne sends best wishes to all. Jack Bensel is in very poor health but fortunately is being looked after by a very good friend. James Mills now resides at Apt 611, 3605 Ratliff Rd., Birmingham, Ala., and John Alfrie at 118 East Court St., Paris, Ill.

JOHN L. K. JENNEY
Box 123
Montchanin, DE 19710

Our first reunion as members of the Old Guard passed pleasantly (and rather quietly) in the most glorious weather since June of 1925.

The Class dinner, arranged and presided over by MacMillan, was held at the Nassau Club on Fri., June 7, and attended by Dill (Dorothy joined us on Sat.), Jenney, Bill Larrabee, the *MacMillan*s, Dorothy and George Phillips, Weare, Estelle Ives, Mary Jane Paynter, Shirley Steeger and her niece, Marcia Mosher and husband. Cressy Belden '91 helped with the arrangements. An interesting letter from Pete Street (who was unable to be with us) was read (copy available on request). He has just returned with Hella from a visit to Czechoslovakia: "At the National Museum we saw some of Hella's uncle's paintings, recently recovered from Hitler's collection. One was an enchanting Peter Breugel." At the Class executive meeting on Saturday morning, MacMillan announced the appointment of Phillips and Peckerman to the Executive Committee. Phillips was elected assistant treasurer. Peckerman was not present: "Still in winter quarters after a fall on ice in March."

President Shapiro greeted us at the 1925 table at the Old Guard Luncheon, held in Chancellor Green Library Rotunda. The 1925 banner preceded our small group, consisting of one golf cart and some of the only pedestrians in the old guard section of the P-rade, which followed a new route down the middle of the campus.

Other regulars unable to attend: the Kennans (regrets on a postcard from Norway); Draper (facts of getting old prevent long-distance travel); Nields (no airplane); C. V. Wilson (almost a hip operation after fall in his house last Christmas); Harvey Phillips (70th reunion at The Hill); Warnock (Dorothy still recovering from her illness).

It is with great sadness that we report the death of Ed Doll at his home on May 2. A memorial will follow. We have a memorial in this issue.

ROBERT WOHLFORTH
57 Rockwell Rd.
Ridgefield, CT 06877

Three days of storybook June weather greeted the 42 members of 1926 who returned to the campus on June 7-9 for the 65th reunion of the Class, together with numerous associate members and close family relations. Held in comfortable quarters in the Nassau Inn, where several working-session luncheons and dinners were enjoyed, the Class set a new 65th reunion attendance record and a new top figure for a 65th Annual Giving effort among all prior 65th reunion classes. A new quinquennial slate of Class officers were installed to handle future affairs and responsibilities: President, Orvel Sebring, Executive V.P., Henderson Supplee Jr.; Secretary, Bill Walstrum; Treasurer, Bob Ward; Class Agent, Lew Rumford; Assistant Secretaries, Gil Flues and Jim Robbins; Assistant Treasurer, Walt Aldridge. The new 1991 Class Directory was presented by Bill Walstrum and retiring secretaries Orvel Sebring and Bob Wohlforth distributed a special Reunions issue of the Class SUMMER SUMMARY. The Class participated in another tradition-breaking activity when it occupied some 20 antique model-T Ford runabouts and a replica of a San Francisco cable car for most of the Saturday P-rade. Led by MacGregor's Bagpipe Band and inaugurating the new all-on-campus marching route, '26 received much applause and interest for its novel turnout and drive-by of the official reviewing stand.

At the formal Friday dinner meeting, Class awards were given to the following classmates: To the late George Beach, the Award for Distinguished Service in memory of his long and loyal support of the Class of 1926 and Princeton University; to Ted Beck, retiring president, the Distinguished Service Award for his outstanding service to the Class and to the University in many fields of activity; to Gil Flues, the Class Achievement Award in recognition of his exceptional World War service and his contributions to the Class of 1926 and Princeton University; to Carroll Long, M.D., the Class Achievement Award for distinguished service to his profession in the U.S. and for his work as a medical missionary in foreign countries; the Class Council Award to William B. Nevius, M.D., for his excellent work as reunion chairman over the past five years; to Howie Kiser, the Class Council Award for her invaluable service to the Class of 1926, and to all Classes, and to the University, in the preparation, editing, and mailing communications of all shapes, complexity, and volume.

The Class Memorial Service for departed classmates, organized and chaired by Jim Newman, was held in the University Chapel at 10 A.M. on Saturday. Past and newly elected Class officers, award winners, and a Special Memorial Committee participated in conducting the services and the reading of the list of departed members since June 1986. Our classmates Houdy Vail and Rev. Luke Lukens gave the invocation and benediction respectively.

Members of 1926 present on Friday and Saturday were Walt Aldridge, Ted Beck, Bill Casper (from San Diego—farthest distance), Frank Dana, Ed Dumbauld, Barrows Dunham, John Easton, Gil Flues, Buzz Hallock, Frank Handy, Marsh Harrington, Reed Hartzel, Charlie Hemmersley, Fritz Kellogg, Carroll Long, Luke Lukens, John MacMurray, Bill Master, Phil Meyer, Bill Nevius, Jim Newman, Charles Perera, Glen Perry, Slew Peyton, Dick Quay, John Queen, Jim Robbins, Lew Rumford, Dolpb Schmidt, Walt Schob, Dick Schwartz, Bill Siemon, Wooz Supplee, Orvel Sebring, St Uhl, Howdy Vail, Bill Walstrum, Bob Ward, Ed Wilson, Bob Wohlforth. Associate members included: Madge Beck, Donna Dana, Vida Dugan, Betsy Cook, Alice Dunham, Anne Flues, Lucy Kellogg, Eve Labouisse, Joan Leslie, Lu Anne Long, Helen MacMurray, Margo McConibe, Estelle Meyer, Patty Nevius, Della Sue Neuman, Dottie Peyton, Marj Quay, Rose Rumford, Betty Siemon, Mary Supplee, Margaret Sebring, Madge Uhl, Alta Vail, Mildred Wohlforth.

We note with sadness the death of Arthur Hughes May 22, 1991, in Guilford, Conn. A memorial will follow. We have memorials in this issue.

For an off-year reunion, 1927 had a fair turnout, including President Jim Westfall, Kutcb and Ros Mayers, Ted and Marie Bachran, Don Kemmerer, Beatrice Stuart, Marian Hall, and Al and Olga Wolfe. Jack Sands planned to come, but was prevented by a fall which sent him to the hospital for six weeks with a broken hip. At home in Richmond he used a walker and sighed "No golf for a while." But you bet he'll be back on the links pretty soon! Bernie Thulin's "annual report" says that he is still busy as "an unregistered private investment adviser with just a few client friends," concentrating on common stocks—with "quite satisfactory results." The financial news suggests that the country could use more like him.

The Executive Committee meeting on June 9 decided to continue spring luncheons, picnics or luncheons at selected football games, and annual Class and Executive Committee meetings (as required). We are in sound financial condition after paying 50% of the overhead cost of the 60th reunion from Class funds, and annual dues will remain at $15. President Westfall will consult University authorities about hanging (in the Gadebusch Room) a framed water-color sketch of Prospect, given by Mrs. Reed Stuart. The Class of 1927 Memorial Scholarship Fund is steadily growing, and is providing support for two sophomores. Plans will start at once for the 65th reunion and a special Annual Giving Fund. Keep news coming during the summer!

We have memorials in this issue.

The 63rd reunion of the Class of 1928 was quite similar to previous off-year gatherings. There were 12 classmates present, with nine wives, a daughter, and an honorary member. The Friday evening dinner at the Town House Motel in Hightstown was a gala affair, from the rack-of-lamb entree to the entertaining finale presented by the singing group of undergraduate men, the Footnotes.

The Saturday luncheon at Prospect House on campus followed a meeting of the executive committee. We were joined by our sophomore flag-bearers, Jared Tobman '93 and Mark Beeley '93. The new route of the P-rade, and the wide strip of bleacher-flanked green stretching from the reviewing stand on the field just below the campus, were apparently approved by all. Numerous were the comments on the ideal weather of this particular day. Most of the '28 reuners joined the march of the P-rade, a few with the assistance of golf carts. It was a time of satisfying sociability, both with our own Class members and with other friends, family, and fellow-members of the larger Princeton family.

Present were: Ikey and Ken Atkinson, Marge and Bill Elliott, Tommy Hughes and his daughter Cassandra Midelfort, Charlotte and Fred Hyer, Frances and Joe Gibson, Alice and Park Johnson, Peter and Jim Lee, Jane and Don Liddell, Helen and John McMartin, Lou Otten, accompanied in the P-rade by two daughters and some of their families, Jeanette and Gerrish Thurber, Perc Young, and honorary member Judy McCartin.

Plans were announced for the Yale Game luncheon at Jadwin Gym in November, and the Class Luncheon at the Princeton Club of N.Y., probably on Wed., Dec. 4, 1991.

Two recent deaths were announced: John Raymond Murray on Apr. 24, and Walter Hirschon on May 12. The sympathy of the Class is with their families. We have memorials in this issue.

LOUIS F. KEMP
12 Winthrop Rd.
Guilford, CT 06437; 203-453-4646

Reunion Chairman Spence Marsh reported a good turnout for our 62nd. The following attended at Cap

& Gown: Beasley, Birdsall and son, Breuer, Brodhead, Gibbons, Logan, Lopez, Marsh, McPherson, Mole, Date Smith, and Udlike. Debbie Carey fittingly was a guest of the Class. Most had their wives attending, making a total of 24. A fine letter has been received from André Heron, recipient of the Horatio Biglow Ballard Scholarship. He writes in part, "It's a great honor to be given monies to achieve something that would otherwise be an unattainable dream. I'm pursuing a career in mechanical engineering. Thank you, Class of 1929, for this opportunity."

Sterling McMillan writes that he and his wife just recently returned from a trip to Phoenix, Hawaii, and San Francisco. It was partially funded by winning a raffle for the Holden Arboretum for a trip to Hawaii. The winning ticket was sold to them by their daughter, who is director of development for the arboretum. This raised some eyebrows. On June 11, they attended the graduation of their granddaughter, Grace Offutt '91, one of their three grandchildren attending Princeton.

Regrettably, Ted Jarrett has a brain tumor which is inoperable. Word from classmates would be most welcome.

My granddaughter, Karen Kemp '90, has announced her engagement to her classmate Peter Espenshade '90.

Sadly I report the deaths of Dutch Brodhead's wife, Suzanne; Sam Beasley's wife, Tilly; and John McPherson's wife, Katharine. Our deep sympathy to each of them.

We have a memorial in this issue.

Bethesda, MD 20814

Our 61st reunion, coming on the heels of a major reunion last year, was attended by a smaller number, but it lacked nothing in fellowship and good humor. Headquarters was at Cloister Inn. After a pleasant cocktail hour outdoors in beautiful weather, an excellent dinner was served indoors. Present for dinner were: Sylvia and John Bennet, Genevieve and Al Covolo, Peggy and Fred Craig, Agnes and Bill Forsyth, Fred Prost, Ed Linville, Anita and Dave McMullin, Tom Miles, Associate Margaret Morgan and two grandsons, Evelyn and Jack Myers, Wally Ruckert, Red Schneider, Merrill Sheppard, and Al Wood. At lunch the next day, Margaret and Tom Moore and family joined us.

The new P-rade route, although much improved over the old one, proved a bit arduous for some of us, and we will need some golf carts or other transportation next year for the trip back up hill from Poe Field. George Snyder and his son joined us for the P-rade. Needless to say we old folks experienced a real thrill on receiving the traditional cheer from the senior class aligned along the P-rade route. It put some added zip into our steps.

Unfortunately, our gallant Reunion Chairman, Don Dilmars, had undergone a triple bypass operation a few weeks before Reunions and could not be present to enjoy the fruits of his excellent advance planning. We expressed our appreciation in a toast to him at dinner.

With sadness we note the death of John Gorman on Apr. 17 and of Herb Preston on Apr. 25, 1991; also of Associate Leone Brigham on May 19, 1991. We have memorials in this issue.

If all the cars and buses in Jersey were back to back, it would surely be Reunions weekend. But nothing stopped the success of our super-60th. Bill Newman, our chairman, at latest tally counted 89 classmates returning with 72 associates and others. The Saturday buffet before the P-rade, with 200, stretched the limits of the Prince William Room at the Nassau Inn. Everyone had a wonderful time greeting old friends and renewing contact with some not seen for many years.

A Sandy Maxwell jazz combo played for us at dinnertime, and the Tigerlilies sang for us as they introduced themselves. Two long-distance awards were presented, one to Lee McAnerney of Alaska, and the other to Ollie Thurman from Hawaii. (When asked if he would host a mini-reunion sometime, Ollie reminded us that the distance from Honolulu to Newark is the same as from Newark to Honolulu.) A '31 pin was given to Rene Carillo who was attending his first reunion, and a perpetual calendar was awarded to Meek Keen, our only classmate who has attended every reunion since graduation.

Pen Reed reported for the nominating committee the following slate of officers to serve us for the next five years, as follows: Gib McCabe, president; Bill Wells, V.P.; Arthur Crocker, treasurer; Tim Kerr, secretary; Dusty Farnum, memorialist. The new officers were approved with applause, and a standing ovation was given for Whitle Mountain who has served as president for the past five years. On the more solemn side, the always-impressive Memorial Service included the reading of the names of 77 classmates who have died since our last major reunion in 1986.

A mid-summer issue of THE FLAP will give further details, with a Class calendar of events for the coming year. The mood of the 60th was one of good fellowship, mixed with a touch of emotional nostalgia. As the little boy wrote on his exam, "the sun never set on the British Empire because Britain is in the east and the sun sets in the west." That is a far-fetched analogy of the affection many of us feel about the Class of '31. The 60th is now in the annals of our history, but, as they say, real love stories never have endings.

We have memorials in this issue.

Our 59th (and President Jim Rowbotham's 35th in a row as reunion chairman—surely a Princeton record) was a splendid affair, celebrated under flawless skies. In the words of one who was there: "The finest reunion weekend in memory of those who attended." Present were: Connie and Fritz Brauer, Lucille and Dick Bruere (with Serena Ashman, a widow of '36), Dodie and Frank Carpenter, Tom Cook, Mal Foster, Babs and Jack Kellogg, Ty Kennedy, Lawrie and Arch Kerr, Eleanor and Dutch Leubausser, Marion and Bud Moffat, Buzz Roberts, Jim Rowbotham, Virginia and DeWitt Stern, Lloyd Thomas, Mia and Lew Van Dusen, and Hugh Wise. We were delighted by the presence of two widows: Amos Eno's Alice, and Ward Randall's Lee, who had as her guest Ruth Abos. The Methuselah Trophy went to Paul Smith (seven great-grandchildren).

Reporting for A.G., Jack Kellogg announced a total of $92,540 from 147 donors, or 80% of the Class, as of June 5. Our Class gives out two awards. The 1932 Plaque goes to the Class more than 25 and less than 50 years out with the highest percentage of dues payers. It was taken by 1942 with 77.3% participation. Our second award, the Class of 1932 Trophy for the Class less than ten years out with the highest percentage of dues payers and the best all-around class program went to the Class of 1989. The Zack Taylor-Ray Swain memorial punch was quaffed on Saturday morning following our annual meeting at which it was voted to update our "Where Are They Now?" booklet and use it (with suitable additions) as our 60th Yearbook. At our parting dinner on Saturday night we were joined by our 1932 Class lecturer, the charming Prof. Lisa Jardine, who returned to England the following day. That's it for this year. Have a great summer. See you in the fall—maybe at the get-together which Babs and Jack Kellogg will host at the first Ivy League home football game.

33 ARTHUR MOODY
600 E. Cathedral Rd., Apt. A314
Philadelphia, PA 19128

We had wonderful weather for Reunions. Dinner at the Nassau Club Friday was a festive affair. One notices that our parties have become less alcohol-consuming, but no less jolly, as the years pass by, and actually fit in well with the University's efforts to reduce the presence of alcohol at reunions, as well as in everyday campus life. This year our numbers were down slightly (24) but the Club put us in a smaller room, so the noise level was right up there. Bob Keidel and Frank Townend discussed plans for our 60th reunion in 1993, to be held at the Nassau Inn, and the mini-reunion next Oct. 15-17 at Skytop Lodge. Saturday we had a good turnout for the P-rade (15), and found the new route very satisfactory—mostly downhill.

Present at some point were: Nancy and Ray Carter, Mary and Ernie Chamberlin, Bettie Davis (Charlie was in the hospital, and much missed. We hope he's better now), Nels Dungan, Marian and Chip Green, Frances and Maddy Haytbe, Barbara and Bill Hewson, Justine and Bob Keidel, Rita and Dave Ludlum, Helen and Jack MacDonald, Curly Marsh, Becky and Art Moody, Elsie and Ray Paul, Naomi and Lou Reik, Kate and Ferdie Roebbling, Lorna and Joe Shinn, and Lenchen and Frank Townend.

For Skytop, many of the above are planning to go, and in addition: the Ed Bartlett, Frannie Carew, Tom Creigh, the Bill Crous, the Eberingtons, Fiches, Eddie Gays, Sophia Godfrey, the Herb Markses, the Andy Smiths, Norma Smith, Brenda (possibly) and Henry Thompson. By the time this column appears, time will be running short, so do not delay in making your reservations.

IN MEMORIAM: Gordon Summerfeldt May 8, 1991, in Tavernier, Fla. A funeral service in Princeton was attended by the Davises, Greens, Ludlums, Fred Williams, and Weedie Stokes. Bill Hirst, May 20, 1991, in Devon, Penn. Freddie and Bill Croul and Art Moody attended the funeral. Harry (Bill) Mitchell, May 27, 1991, in Washington, D.C. We have memorials in this issue.

34 RALPH K. FITCHE

Princeton, NJ 08540

Twenty-six stalwarts and 19 bonnie lassies of the Class graced our 57th reunion—mirabile dictu—not a one of them has changed since June 1934. Attending were: Jeannie and Jack Bales, Lonnie and Gordy Brown, Frank Buchner, Bobbie and Ed Duker, Adra and Ken Fairman, Mary and Arm Fell, Gloria and Doug Hahn, Jane and Fred Hamilton, Marion and Wes Haubner, Bob Holton, Greta and Stan Ivins, Janet and Mal Johnson, Alex Keer, Nancy (widow of Rog) Kirkpatrick, Bob Kuser, Sally and Art Lane, Barbara (widow of Fred) Lawrence, Betty and Ernie May, Sally and Jack Palmer, Nummy and Corry Pearson, Addie and Ralph Ruchie, Bill Robbins, Bayard Roberts, Betsy (widow of Jim) Samuels, Lank Seibert, Bill Selden, Henry Tblbar, Moose Weeks, and Marion and Rus Wood.

The hospitality of our host Class, 1936, was all and more than we had a right to expect. For the great weather, libations, food, and conviviality, we were most grateful. As usual, we scattered, each to his favorite seminar, concert, or bar. On Friday, the Ritchies whistled up a gorgeous afternoon and entertained us royally at the Barn. Dinner at the Nassau Club was a great success, and Bayard Roberts held the palaver to a minimum, which led to more socializing than usual. A highlight was the announcement that Doug Hahn was to receive on the following day one of the three Alumni Council awards for service to Princeton. The new P-rade route worked out very well, downhill all the way.

Some class!

[The above report was written by Arm Fell, who has never missed a reunion. Arm also reported our 32nd and 36th reunions, in 1966 and 1970.]

We have a memorial in this issue.

CHEERS. In the presence of several Class officers, the Class of 1912 Trophy was awarded to 1935 at the Alumni Council's reunion luncheon in Proctor Hall of the Graduate College. This annual award recognizes the Old Guard class having the highest percentage of members at the preceding year's reunions. On the basis of numbers (103) as well as percentage (33) the Class last year broke all 55th-year records.

FIFTY-SIXTH. This year the number and percentage were smaller, but the spirit was equally high. Many called it the best off-year reunion in Class history and heaped praise on Eldon Earle for making all the arrangements. They came from as far as El Dorado, Calif. (Jim Goodwin); St. Croix (Jack Brown); and Jacksonville Beach, Fla. (Ayako Cone, Hutch's widow) to enjoy a clear, cool Friday evening together, plus cocktails, wine, and a smartly catered dinner—all beneath a colorful tent in the big side yard of Elsa and Henry Patton's rural Princeton home. Their guests included 30 classmates, 21 wives, two widows, and one fiancé.

ADVENTURE. The next Class trip abroad will take 25 classmates, wives, and friends to Scotland and England. Those wishing to join the Sept. 15-30 adventure should phone Dorothy Brown at 800-548-4462.

BIG BUCKS. The University has 14 endowed funds totalling $864,000 which are directly connected with the Class. They provide scholarships; purchase library books; reward athletes; give aid to needy students; finance research, professorships, and lectures; refurbish the chapel organ; and maintain other buildings. Gifts of other than endowed funds have greatly swelled the total of '35 gifts. To wit: in the last six years, the Class has contributed or pledged more than $4.6 million to the University, exclusive of Annual Giving.

IN MEMORIAM. Charles B. Colemore Jr., of Baltimore, Jan. 23, 1913–May 12, 1991. The Class has memorials in this issue.

Our 55th reunion was graced by beautiful weather over the four days. Some 95 classmates and many wives and some widows came from all over the country to enjoy a terrific schedule of events. The open bar and fine meals were indeed appreciated.

Activities began Thurs., June 6, with cocktails and dinner at our headquarters at the Graduate College. President Harold Shapiro greeted us on behalf of the University. After dinner we danced to the fine music of Ed Polcer and the Condon Gang. The undergraduate singing group the Footnotes was great.

Friday morning several of us visited the Art Museum or engaged in George Brown's athletic activities. The JAC Wellers hosted luncheon at their home for Carl Peterson's class engineers. That afternoon retired Bishop John Coburn and Jahe Best conducted an impressive Service of Remembrance in the Miller Chapel of the Princeton Theological Seminary. Our past Class presidents in turn read the list of some 86 classmates who died since the publication of our 50th Reunion Yearbook. Before dinner the undergraduate singing group the Tigerlilies excelled.

The Class Dinner Friday evening was presided over by President Hancock and Coburn offered the invocation. Treasurer Ryan reported that the Class was financially solvent. Class Agent Ned Williams and Hancock excited the Class by announcing that '36 had broken '33's 55th-year reunion A.G. record of $517,000. Our campaign will continue until June 30 to reach our goal of $550,000. We are proud to have set records at our 50th and 55th. Another highlight was the reading by Stan Kosbler of his two latest Class poems, "By the Numbers" and "Pon." Stan presented to each classmate a beautiful orange-covered illustrated booklet designed by his daughter Mary Anne K. Brush '83 with the title POEMS FOR A REUNION, containing all his poems for this and past major reunions. What a splendid gift!

Ed Glassmeyer, speaking for the Nominating Committee, including Gus Groel and Van Richard, announced the following slate of Class officers for the next five years: Benn Jesser, president; Bill Scheide and John Paul Jones, V.P.s; Jim Benson, secretary; Bob Gibby, treasurer; and Ned Williams, Class agent. Benson presided over the election and announced unanimous approval of the slate. Jesser made an enthusiastic acceptance speech and presented a beautiful large engraved silver platter to Hancock for his excellent performance as president. Hancock then presented gifts to M. Brown and B. Constable, Benson, Scheide, and Ryan. Menand awarded long-distance prizes to Bill Wright of Seattle, Wash., and to John Paul Jones of La Jolla, Calif. Benson, as Class P-rade marshal, urged discipline in our marching and confirmed that all Class wives are recognized as associate members per our new by-laws, adopted Apr. 1991. The evening ended with dancing and Scott Jones once again leading a large contingent in our traditional Step Sing.

Saturday morning, Jesser met with the new officers for planning purposes. A major item was discussion on future mini-reunions.

Classmates and wives enjoyed another fine buffet luncheon and then either marched in or viewed the P-rade in its new improved route. Our orchestra, the Condon Gang, on a truck heading our marchers, played continuously during the entire P-rade. John Paul Jones and Bill Trevor delighted the thousands of onlookers with their energetic dancing. The Class marched exceptionally well and was constantly cheered. A great dinner that evening was served in a tent near the pool at Betty Constable's beautiful home. Fine music was supplied by Sandy Maxwell's Trio. Sunday morning John Coburn preached impressively at the University Chapel. Brunch was served under a lawn tent at the lovely house of the Scheides. There were several old Sid Silleck movies of past Reunions shown to us along with Hancock's tape of our 50th, and one of John Paul Jones's recent hilarious exposure as a participant on the national TV program "The Love Connection."

We are all grateful to co-chairpersons Marnie Brown and Betty Constable and always hardworking, dependable adviser Howie Menand. Thanks also to our devoted undergraduate staff under the leadership of Jack Hellman '92 and Mona Metwalli '92.

So we all departed for home after experiencing a truly great reunion with many old friends. It was a gathering of PON long to be remembered!

We have memorials in this issue.

STANFORD F. MEDINA
250 Broadway, Rm. 2104
New York, NY 10007

We had a roaringly successful 54th reunion, blending convivially with '36's 55th at the Graduate College. The action started with the Alumni Council luncheon meeting Friday, attended by Walt Close, Carl Ferenbach, Stan Medina, Ben Poole, and Frank Taplin. In the afternoon came inspection of the new pool ($34 million according to Fred Stichel, $13 million according to Dick Hough), the ALUMNI WEEKLY reception at Prospect, a forum on trade blocs, the Tigerlilies, Chairman Jack Eberhardt had arranged dinner at the Nassau Club, with reports by Close on mini-reunions and the Bendheim building, Bill Rawls on 70% duespayers, Geoff Stengel on 50% contributors and Ferenbach on that big 55th coming up. Bob Bendheim, Jack Eberhardt, and Jack Irwin were re-elected to the executive committee, terms expiring 1994. Fourteen wore Class ties, seven did not. Stichel went to the Triangle Show. The Ed Polcer orchestra was fabulous that evening, with a great trombone player. A couple of men managed to cross the golf course in the dark without falling in the lake to visit '41's 50th at Forbes but found it inferior, though with a good Tommy Dorsey orchestra. Saturday morning featured Poole in the alumni mile and 5K, Stichel with 36 cross laps in the pool and a forum on four decades of deaning. We were visited by Fritz and Gay Blaicher and David Eberhardt, continuous reunion attendant since age two, carrying son Tyler, aged two months. At the P-rade our banner was carried by Chrissie "Brooke Shields" Beauchamp '92, a Tigerlily; and Chuck Goodwin and Tap toted a 100th anniversary Triangle sign. The new route ran through the old library, down past McCosh, back along Whig-Clio and down the hill past the old gym to Poe Field. In attendance: Fred and Liz Blaicher, Ginny and Bill Cleaver, Betty and Walt Close, Brad Cochran, Ruth and Jerry Congleton, Marion and Larry Crauford, Lillian and Ira Dorian, Jim Foran, Dave Foster, Sally Grabam, Harriet and Gordon Greenfield, Stan Medina, Jahe Nevius, Stevie and Bill Orr, Ann and Ben Poole, Bill Rawls, Louise and Geoff Stengel, Fred Stichel, Peggy and Frank Taplin, Evie and Sam Thomson. George Otis missed the party because stung by a bee.

Don Creecy died May 15, 1991. A memorial will follow. We have memorials in this issue.

While some were saying, "The older I get, the better I was," 32 others of your classmates were demonstrating the reverse of this at our 53rd reunion. Aided and abetted by perfect weather, Jack Platten arranged a satisfying get-together with had something for every taste, with a minimum of schedule-watching. Attendance at alumni-faculty forums was on the upswing, tennis slightly less popular than previously, but visiting and renewing old ties the predominant activity.

Those who took the April trip to Spain spoke glowingly of the congeniality of the group and of the super arrangements, which were made smoother by the expertise of Marinka and George Morgan, who not only hosted them in their beautiful new home in the Benidorm, but erased minor problems in the tour. More about this in a later issue.

The award dinner was a bit different this year, and not just because of the uniqueness of the awardee's expertise, but for the use to which he has put it. He is Clyde Hubbard, well known in numismatic circles as far and away the preeminent authority on old Mexican coinage. He uses his vast knowledge to help Latin American authorities bring to justice, at grave risk to his personal safety, counterfeiters who plague the numismatic world. Ancient coins are worth far more than their metal content, especially in Mexico, where coinage is primarily in silver. He says that many treasure hunters who search for gold bars and Spanish doubloons on the ocean floor are mostly pirates, crooks, or counterfeiters, and he has exposed several. Clyde gave an informative slide show illustrating interesting old coins and their methods of minting. He was assisted by his attractive daughter Felice and son Jason. Clyde has lived in Mexico since 1947 and manufactured cosmetics there for many years.

The P-grade followed a shorter route, entirely on campus, and best of all it ended near headquarters. Host Class 1941, under Lynn Tipson, put on a super program which was capped by the Saturday P.M. performance of the Eight Ball Jazz Band. (Hoffman, George Morgan, Tams, and Bud Underwood) and longtime co-conspirators Pat Mansur, Alan Cary, Frank Clark, and Wild Bill Whelan. Few slept while they played.

ATTENTION WEST COASTERS: The 38th annual tailgate mini-reunion will be perpetrated at the Stanford-Cornell football game in Palo Alto Oct. 12. Send $12 U.S. to Lee Gould, Box 982, Pebble Beach, CA 93953, and be there for the first Ivy League game for Stanford.

The Kampmann entertained Walter Lord following Walter's very successful appearance at a Pearl Harbor symposium sponsored by the Nimitz Foundation in Austin in May. We are pleased to identify the guest in the background as Jonathan Hornblower '73, Whistle's son.

We do have news of our 52nd reunion, but, owing to deadline requirements, no photos available yet. For an off-off-year we had a splendid turnout: 44 classmates, many wives, and three widows: Barbara Boynton, B. T. Meech, and Hannah Fox. Long distance honors were divided between Brud Harper (Albuquerque, N.M.) and John Nelson (Boulder, Colo.) who was accompanied by wife Edna, son Jim and grandson Harley. Brud confirmed that he plans to challenge the Channel again in July. Our Class dinner in Chancellor Green topped off a festive Friday which had begun with a reception hosted by Janet and Bob Sullivan around the pool in their garden, which was in full bloom for the occasion. The Princeton Band, making its annual appearance at our party, strung itself out around the rim of the pool and was conducted by their leader precariously perched at the tip of the diving board. Awesome.

A note from Barbara Mills brings the good news that her and Tborley's grandson Peter was accepted on early admission and will join our other Princeton progeny on campus this fall. And a possible candidate for Class of 2011 is Colleen Taylor Culbertson, daughter of Tom III '71 and first grandchild of Jean and Tom Culbertson. So '39 just keeps rollin' along.

BENJAMIN FULLER

A surprisingly large representation of more than 70 classmates, wives, and widows returned on June 7 for our 51st reunion dinner at the Nassau Club.

Those who signed in at Forbes College were: Cbtz Anderson, Arberg, Boozan, Boule, Cadgene, Bill Davidson, Jack Davidson, Epstein, Farley, Proeb, Fryer, Ben Fuller, Geisel, Gilleaudeau, Gillespie, Goben, Hamid, Holloway, Kayser, Kimball, Kuehner, Lamp, McEldowney, Morris, Neuins, Marsh Palmer, Pearre, Pettit, Powers, Pugh, Jake Rogers, Schmitt, Tily, Trembley, Harry Turner, Van den Heuvel, Watkins, Dick Wells, Yardley, Yates, Yocum, Harrison Young.

Despite earlier reservations, those who marched in the P-grade seemed definitely pleased with the route—especially the long and gentle downhill straightaway and the ample shade along the course.

Let's not forget that Reunions time is not only for rejoicing and friendship renewals but for thoughtful remembrances as well. In line with this sentiment, we note a youthful 1940 foursome in their graduation gowns of 51 years ago (l-r): roommates Fred Rowe, Bob Woodbull, Johnny Angst, and Joe McCrudden. Fred, as some of you already know, has not been at all well; we lost Bob in WWII; Johnny is spending more time traveling and in Florida; and Joe continues to bask in the beauties of Washington State and has a granddaughter in the Princeton Class of 1993.

Our classmate Dave Frisch died May 23, 1991. A memorial is being prepared. We have memorials in this issue.

BILL WILSON
Box 1420
Bridgehampton, NY 11932; 516-537-2458

Our 50th celebration has come and gone in a blaze of glory, shattering all statistics. 246 signed up, and all but a few came. Wives, friends, widows, children, and grandchildren swelled the total to maybe 600. Our Annual Giving exceeds $2.1 million, and, with help between now and the end of June, will break the all-time 50th reunion record of $2,274,000.

From Thursday noon to Sunday brunch this was pure PARTY for old friends, unadulterated by maudlin pomposity. Just two gracious speeches by Presidents Shapiro and Douglas, plus Hugh Agri-cola's moving homily of remembrances at our private service in the chapel. Dinner dancing every evening, once to Buddy Murrow's Tommy Dorsey big band blasting out Mr. D's original arrangements. Sandy Maxwell '39 and the Eight-Balls played Saturday night. Other Princeton people said 1941's P-grade section shuffle was the snappiest they'd ever seen.

Clipper Cleaver's entertainment committee put on acts which for sheer class put the old Bijou to shame. He played in one himself, improbably impersonating the Princess Papooli in grass skirt and coconut shell bra. Ackard and McAneny violated ivory in most wondrous and charming ways with duets from No No NANETTE dedicated to our Bus Davis. Ben Duffy and Clipper paid loving tribute to departed Barney Ross with words and song. Guardsman-trim Dave Davis and willowy Mary Ann enchanted us with a 15-set exhibition showing the evolution of American dance steps from the "Promenade" to the "Charleston Rag."

Several dozen classmates helped put on this marvelous affair. Reunion Chairman (and self-styled "mother hen") Lynn Tipson and "The Indispensable One" Jean Gorman must be singled out with appreciation for the incredible effort, good sense, and, above all, love, they brought to making it so memorable.

The Class was pleased... but not surprised... to receive two silver cup awards from the Alumni Council for holding the best-attended mini-reunions of all classes: New Orleans, Vero Beach, and Charleston.

For follow-ups, save Feb. 19-24, 1992, for "PRINCETON '41's L.A. TODAY" courtesy of Allan MacDougall, Larry Ackard, Al Van Court, Irv Walsh, George Genzmer, and Connie Contani. Also, Apr. 22-25, 1992, for The Cloister, Sea Island, Georgia, where our host will be Norman Hilton. Come to both. Bi-coastal is "in" these days.

The fourth horseman of the Apocalypse continues his ambush. Bob Rowley suffered a fatal heart attack on Apr. 7 in Fort Pierce, Fla. Then Basil Crapster of Gettysburg, Penn., died of an aneurism on May 18. Both had planned to come to the 50th.

ARMSTRONG HUNTER

The annual Hank Austin Reunions report:

"You are old dear alumni," the young undergrad said, "Yet for every reunion you get out of bed! Do you think at your age this is right?"

Despite a goodly number of operation scars, a few canes, and a neck brace, 55 of our close family said "positively yes!" Viewed vaguely through the grapevine, we believe all of the following attended the Huntingtons' pulchritudinous paradise of pachy-sandra and palatable provender and potation: Armstrong, Austin and Maureen, Bingbam and Louise, Brush, Busse, Coale, Chuck Cook, Crandall and Liz, Elmer and Lucy, Lemma Endersby, Foster and Cathy, Fowler and Ginny, Gault and Roste, Ernest Gordon and Helen, Guzzardi and Anne, Hardin and Jean, Huntington and Jean, Husted and Thalia Barbara, Cliff Jones, Lowry and Mary, Mayer (and gloves), McCabe, McFaddin and Marge, Bert O'Neill and Jane, Oschwald and Margt, Pate, Putnam and Dobbie, Reath and Nell, Seibels, Stoney Simons and Ginny, Smedley, Stetnboff, George Thompson, Wylan and Tia and Don Vreeland.

Weather was perfect, P-grade exhausting (but Busse knew everyone on the sidelines), dancing painful but fun (Tommy Dorsey Friday, Eight-Balls Saturday, Gabriel Sunday). About 24 of the above enjoyed Saturday evening dinner at tables in a corner of huge tent at Forbes College, which was dominated by '41's turnout of more than 250 alumni plus wives, etc.

We sincerely missed the rest of you. It gets more emotional each year. Please try to make our 50th, now but 11 months away.

Thus concludes the Austin report of our Rehearsal 49th. Sadly, AH now takes over to report the deaths of Dick Versteegen's widow, Fatib, Apr. 28, Jim Hooper's wife, Frances (Sis), May 8, and classmate and friend Chuck Wilson who died May 9 at home in Southport, Conn. To classmates Jim and Ysabel and the families of all the Class sends its deep sympathy and warm support.

JACK LAPLIN
10 Vardon Rd.
West Hartford, CT 06117; 203-523-8929

In spectacular weather—perhaps the best in Reunions history—the Class enjoyed its 48th reunion. Some 20 classmates, three widows, and more than a score of wives and family members were in attendance.

In alphabetical order, the attendees were: Ed Bragdon; Art Coddington; Margo and Ed Essertier; Mary and Peter Funk; Joy and Guy Gabrielson; Jack Higgins; Bob Hoffman and daughter Kathy Lakarosky, plus four grandchildren (Paul, Sara, and Karen Lakarosky and Kristy Cramp); Eleanor and Charles Iverson; Hani and Judge Kenefick; Tom Killough; Ed McKeown, who won the distance prize, coming from California; Cathy and Murphy McCarthy, with son Jack III '69, and grandchildren Megan, Kaitlin, and John IV (Jack's brood), along with Caroline, son Kevin's daughter; Lillian and Dave Peaslee, with son Graham Peaslee '81 and son and daughter-in-law, Eileen and Robert Horton, and their children, Becky and Rob; Sabine and Pete Platten; Dick Pond; Frenchy and Wilson Pritchett; Jim Robinson; Vivianne and Norm Russell; Suede Seidler; and Bill Sloane. Last, but by no means least, our honorary classmate, Pat LaRue, was there, as were Class widows Gretchen Allen, Mary Betbune, and Joan Muller.

The Friday night Class dinner featured financial reports (the treasury has more than $30,000 in combined funds, there is over $300,000 in cash and pledges toward the 50th-reunion A.G. fund drive, headed up so ably by Ned Carpenter). Mini-reunions are scheduled for Mar. 9-11, 1992, in Naples, Fla., and early Mar. 1992 in California. Fall homecoming game is Nov. 16 against Yale. Dick Osann leads a 25-man committee to produce a 50th Reunion Yearbook. Gretchen Allen has volunteered to help strengthen ties between Class widows and our events, as members of the Class family; in addition, she will be hostess for a Sunday brunch at Windhover Farm after the 50th.

We hate to end on a somber note, but fortune has not favored us by claiming in death Ding McNulty and Jim Pittenger. Memorials will appear in a subsequent PAW issue.

We'll see you again in print come September.

HURVEY S. STOCKMAN
1041 Matador Dr., S.E.
Albuquerque, NM 87123; 505-296-7057

This is your guest reporter, Dud Woodbridge, filling in for Herv Stockman, who was chasing the little white pill around Scotland and Ireland while some of us were back here working hard at reuniting. I choose to report on our highly successful 40th without a list of participants to enable me to use our limited words to describe the event. Suffice it to say that there were 30 of us and 20 of them—our lovely wives, of course. Mac Macdonald did it again! He selected perfect weather and organized a great off-year reunion around it. Friday evening put us all together in Robertson Hall (the Yamasaki building) for cocktails, a fine dinner, and the Nassoons. George Cbeater, Milwaukee, took the non-prize for distance, with Marti and Jim Thurston, Indianapolis, taking second. This was Jim's first reunion since our 15th. Prexy Yeates Conwell announced that there is expected to be a mini-reunion in Bermuda in Nov. 1992. Mark that down. It ought to be great!

We joined '46's satellite classes in Henry Court listening and dancing to our kind of big band music on Friday and Saturday nights in a big orange and black tent in which we partook of Saturday lunch, also. Bill Ambrose made it back from Irvington, Va. to make sure that he remained a '44 Musketeer, never having missed a reunion along with Herb Hobler and yours truly. The re-routing of the P-rade to keep it on campus and speed it up seemed to work very well. The highlight was the Class of '26 riding in 15 beautiful model-T Fords.

Thank you, Mac, for another great reunion. Now, Herv, get back to your job! A great summer to all of you.

With sorrow and fond memories we mourn the loss of R. Porter Smith, Apr. 13, 1991; John D. Hart, May 6, 1991; and Elliott V. de Moss, May 21, 1991. Memorials will follow.

Building towards the 50th, 16 stalwarts gathered in Princeton for various portions of the June 7 and 8 Reunions weekend. Present for either or both Class dinner at the Nassau Club Friday night and Saturday P-rade were: Charles Allen, Nancy and Barney Barnhart, Bill Borden, Dodie and Stu Carothers, Mary and Bill Clowney, Edge Eginton, Dot and Sam Farmer, Cbet Files, Ken Mills, Fritzi and Jim Mills, Jackie and Ben Moore, Karl Rugart, Betsy and J. B. Smith, Eleanor and Bill Speers, Wai Stewart, and the perfect attendance record couple, Dixie and Bob Wigton. Allen, Borden, and Files took turns carrying the P-rade banner, while Barnhart and Wigton graced the podium at Poe Field, the latter to bestow the Class of '45 reunion pennant.

Prior to June, Class members enjoyed two local reunions. First was on Apr. 30 at the P.C.N.Y. when, under the aegis of Pete Throop, Prexy Jim Mills welcomed Secretary Eginton, who compiled the following roster of attendees: Mary and Bill Clowney, Ted Crane, Warren Fugitt, Virginia and Dr. Tom Gutbrie, Worth Kall, Gay and Lud Ludington, John Mosler, Dud Priester, Bill Scheerer, Bill Schill, and Pete Warren. Dud came all the way from Davenport, Iowa.

A sports reunion was hosted by Pete Throop for golf and Tom Ramsour for tennis at the Country Club of New Canaan on Wed., May 22. Two aspects were noteworthy, first being the many who came from N.J. and Long Island to join the Connecticut group. Second was the deliberate choice of Wednesday, since it is well known that on Wednesday afternoons doctors operate on their golf clubs and tennis racquets rather than upon patients. Accordingly, the number of doctors was not unexpected. Present for golf and tennis were Dave Acaster, Barney Barnhart, Rufe Barringer, John Burnett, Frank Clowney, Don Durgin, Tom Hartmann, Jack Johnston, Fred Kreuscher, Burt Lippincott, Dr. Bob Mesrobian, Prexy Jim Mills, Johnny St. John, Frank Schaffer, Bill Scheerer, Dr. Al Teazs, Dr. John Wilsey and New Canaan Country Club member Bob Brown '44.

'46's GREAT 45TH—JUNE 6-9, 1991:

All '46ers who returned to Princeton for Reunions were treated to a memorable weekend. We were at least 151 in number, but the final count and names of those who attended will have to wait for the next issue. Reunion Chairman Bob Donovan had pulled together an impressive committee of classmates and everything ran like clockwork. Our Madras uniforms continued to be the envy of everyone, and, indeed, along with Bill Sword's generous contribution of Tiger parasols, were instrumental in our winning the prize for the best class in the P-rade! Some of us were comfortably, if not luxuriously, housed in Henry Hall; others tried the seminary or motels. The Reunion Committee and their undergraduate counterparts did a magnificent job for, handling everything from the flow of beer to sales of a new classic '46 t-shirt. Activities began in earnest Thursday evening with drinks and dinner in Wu Hall. President and Mrs. Shapiro joined us for a little fellowship and a few pertinent remarks about the "State of Princeton."

Friday morning saw a galaxy of '46 tennis stars in action under the benevolent guidance of Carroll Howe. Prizes awarded Friday night went to Owen Roberts, No. 1; Hal Erdman, No. 2; and Mew Good, No. 3. For the ladies, the top player was Anne Bullen, followed by Judy Erdman and Janet Roberts. For lunch we adjourned to the boathouse, where old crew hands waxed nostalgic, as we packed away box lunches cleverly packed in Tiger buckets, all this to the strains of a great Dixieland band.

Friday afternoon two of our classmates took part in alumni-faculty forums, Al Lukens as the African expert on the "New World Order" panel, and Bob Furman leading a group on "Why Aren't our Children a Higher Priority?" Objective '46ers reported that both classmates more than held their own. After a few beers at headquarters, we progressed to Commons, now known as Rockefeller College, to listen to the Nassoons. While they, as always, performed well, their finale was greatly enhanced by the presence of three of the greatest Nassoons of all time, Ed Knetzger, Jim Buck, and Dick Armstrong.

The "State of '46" message from President Pete Smith reported that we are alive and well, that our finances are in the black, and that we are on the verge of reaching our impressive goal of $1,000,046, thanks to the hard work of Skeets Blumberg and his A.G. committee. Pete paid well-deserved homage to Bob Donovan and his Reunion Committee, consisting of Vice Chairman and Headquarters Boss Bob Massey, Treasurer Burr Fisher, Housing Czar Paul Spagnoli, Publicity Chief Bob Campbell, Class Historian Olus O'Connor, Chaplain Dick Armstrong, Sports Boss Carroll Howe, Book Editor Dick Charlesworth, and our purveyor of sartorial splendor Reeves Hicks.

After the donation of fitting presents to these deserving heroes, Pete announced the new slate of officers elected for the next five years: President Arnie Berlin, V.P.s Dick Charlesworth and Bob Campbell, Treasurer Charlie Brown, and Secretary Alan Lukens. The wonderful evening ended with a superlative rendition of "Old Nassau" by songster Herm Froeh.

Saturday morning saw us all assembled for the Class photo on Blair steps, after which we headed for the Chapel to take part in a very moving service led by Dick Armstrong. Pete Smith's thoughtful greeting was followed by lesson readings by Charlie Brown and Art Whitcomb and the dedication of the Memorial Fund by Burr Fisher. Bob Campbell read out the list of those friends we have lost over the past five years. Dick's sermon and memorial prayer were followed by his benediction and "Old Nassau."

After lunch in the tent we formed up for the P-rade and marched 150 strong, plus numerous spouses and children, down the hill on the new route, exchanging many locomotives with other classes and finally giving President Shapiro our traditional greeting. Our official program wound up with a lovely dinner at Jadwin, garnished by the Tigerlilies and followed by dancing to the Lamp-lighters back at headquarters. The whole weekend was memorable, the weather perfect, the fellowship extraordinary, the organization superb, and a great time was had by all!

We have memorials in this issue.

Tucson, AZ 85725; 602-741-4715

Ed's. NOTE: Stepping in for Asa Busbnell is George D. Eggers Jr. with the Reunions report.

The magic of Reunions enchanted each of us who returned to campus for the 44th annual gathering of our orange and black clan. Led by those two perennial reuners, Kokatur and Tritsch, we enjoyed an exceptional weekend orchestrated by our off-year reunion impresario Charlie Matter. Highlights included Friday cocktails and dinner at Prospect House, our traditional Saturday lunch at the tennis pavilion, and the inauguration of a new P-rade route.

Other classmates who participated in all or part of the festivities were: Andreus, Angier, Boyle, Cademartori, Campbell, De Veaux, Eggers, Eiler, Faunce, Fischer, Fraiman, Goldstein, Haerther, Hanson, Held, Herr, Hughes, Huichison, Hyde, Jackson, Leibridge, Mallouk, McKeown, Meritt, Palmer, Parmele, Paul, Pearson, Pershing, Powell, Prichett, Robertson, Rogers, Stevenson, Struby, Trimble, Windsor, Woblforth, and Bill Wright.

Dick and Mary Ann Windsor are my nominees for the "indefatigability" award of the year. Enroute to Princeton from Sheboygan, Wisc., they reversed course when they realized they had left a garment bag behind in South Bend, Ind., and drove an extra 800 miles to retrieve the bag, which contained, among other things, Dick's Class blazer.

The Windsors and co-hosts Danny Haerther and Hal and Norma Oates are eager to greet members of the '47 family at the Kohler-Chicago muster, Sept. 18-21. Among the latest "definites" are Andrews, Arrott, Busbnell, Hanson, Kokatur, McKeown, Pershing, Sensenbrenner.

I regret to report the deaths of Pete Benziger, on May 19, and John Hilson, on May 26. Memorials will follow.

Bob Meyer, John Pell, Bu Pirneo, and Lou Schelling outdid themselves in organizing an entirely pleasing 43rd reunion for us. The dinner party at Bedens Brook was total delight. We turned out some 30 strong for the P-rade and smartly turned out we were. The one consolation of our inching year by year towards the head of the march is that we are done relatively quickly. The P-rade has become an interminable bore as everyone and everything is in it, including those who years ago would have been spectators. Our Class kept to its noble tradition of classmates only.

The heartiest of the faithful gathered Sunday for brunch at Clancy's, a sprightly local eatery whose godfather is Bob Clancy and which is presided over by Bob's son, Sean. This was to fuel up for the Meyer-led hegira to Gettysburg and vicinity where local organizers Tom Wolf, John Garber, and Jim Shand, in their turn, outdid themselves for the delight and education of those prescient enough to join the trip. Bob Meyer may have to forsake the culinary business for that of the travel business, such is his creativity and expertise.

For calendar markers, plans are well geared up for a Nov. 16 extravaganza at Springdale Golf Club. It would seem that the boys in blue (Yale blue, that is) will be about and a party is ordained.

Not only are our celebratory powers intact but also our recuperative powers are remarkable. Tom Matthews reports that he is doing well after a stroke; certainly his left-handed (new skill) penmanship is excellent. Henry Fish has discarded crutches after a "twin" total hip sequence in December and April.

So, until the autumn . . .

What a great Reunion weekend—you couldn't have asked for better weather! A happy crowd was assembled at Liz and Charlie Townsend's "Raynham Farm," about 10 miles northwest of Princeton, when we arrived for cocktails and dinner. They had a king-sized tent moored in their lovely rear yard, and by dinnertime some 50 classmates and wives were on hand enjoying each other's company.

Speechifying was mercifully short. President Jim Lebenibal welcomed the gang, thanked Liz and Charlie for having us, told us we did well on the A.G. drive, and that a mid-winter mini-reunion was in the works, more info on that to come. Class Treasurer Bob Kress assured us we are solvent, and Reunion Chairman Larry Thelgard outlined the weekend's festivities, and awarded tiger figurines to Jacques Estel (Felicity, Calif.) and Joe Barbieri (Chicago via Moscow) for longest distance traveled; to Charlie Townsend for putting up with us; and to Mablon Dewey, our indefatigable reuner, for attending his 42nd without a miss. Class V.P. Tony Widmann presented Liz and Charlie with a "sure to catch" assortment of fishing flies, for hosting dinner two years in a row.

The great Class of '51, who hosted us, along with '48-'53, at their major 40th, served up outstanding music and libations at headquarters tent on Friday night. Saturday morning's gorgeous weather drew a throng which filled the Dodge-Osborn court, and '51 broke the record for most classmates back for a 40th. A tip of the hat to '51's Reunion Chairman Joe Howell and his gang!

As you may have read, this year the University tested an on-campus P-rade route, which worked out better than expected but didn't match the real thing. Sorta like having graduation ceremonies in Alexander Hall and not in front of Nassau Hall. We wound our way down the campus road past Dillon Gym to the soccer fields opposite Baker Rink, where stands were set up for the ceremonies. Photos and more comments to come in this fall's Tiger's TALE. Post P-rade, relaxing with friends at headquarters and visiting major tents is the norm, and the good weather made strolling about campus doubly delightful. Most '49ers headed home by dinnertime—those who stayed said the music and dancing at the tent were top flight.

I mentioned the fall Tiger's TALE. I'd welcome photos and news for it by Aug. 1 latest—and would you believe the Sept. 11 issue of PAW has a Class notes deadline of Aug. 1. They don't give me much vacation—enjoy yours!

With much sadness we report that Don Simmons, co-owner of Circle Z Ranch in Patagonia, Ariz., passed away May 7. A Class memorial is in preparation.

The first bilingual mini, Montreal in mid-May, was a grand success in the best tradition of the seven previous minis. Sylvie and Bob Schelling staged it with great imagination, and the unseasonably warm weather was an extra bonus. Forty-five answered the opening call for Wednesday cocktails at the Schellings', and 43 made their way to Sylvie and Bob's farm an hour and a half east for the Sunday wrap-up brunch. The 91 classmates and ladies who attended some or all of the events included Abbotts, Anson, Bancroft, Bogardus, Bob Brown, Arch Broune, Pete Buchanan, Buxton, Costen, Cronbeim, Daley, Danziger, Jim Davis, Dimm, Rod Edwards, Erdman, Fox, Frantz, Joe Gordon, Dick Gray, Joe Green, Gutenkunst, Harry Hall, Bill Haynes, Jordan, Hue King, Knowles, Lackey, Lourie, Martiz, McIntosh, Dave Miller, Harry Moore, Morgan, Perley, Ann Raleigh, Raibman, Read, Rentschler, Tizo Robinson, Rose, Schelling, Sells, Bob Smith, Stratton, Don Taylor, Welch, Zimmerman. Eight of these were attending their first mini, bringing the total to 166 classmates who have been to at least one. There were many highlights, including cocktails atop the scenic Olympic Tower, lunch at the oldest restaurant in North America, dinner at the Molson Brewery, and the Saturday dinner dance in Ogilvy's elegant Tudor Salon. Twenty-six stalwarts took the Saturday jet boat trip with its guaranteed soaking.

Several changes in job status included Bob Read's retirement from Matthews Intl. in Pittsburgh on May 1; Don Taylor's sale of his Campo, Calif. retail lumber business; and Charlie Gutenkunst's switch after 27 years of corporate life into his own management consulting firm in Milwaukee. Jim Buxton will be in the Class of 1995, the third Buxton child to attend Princeton. President of his class at Charleston's Porter-Gaud, he will be trying out for football. Tizo Robinson passed out material on the New Orleans Mini, a Cajun caper, April 2-5, 1992.

Any classmate on Nantucket Island on Aug. 23 should know the local Tigers are planning their annual outing then. Contact Andy Cowherd 74 for details (h) 908-273-7266 or (o) 212-454-3164.

Newly elected President Bill Brown calms the ecstatic multitudes during the P-rade.

The inevitable consequences of Princeton's most successful 40th reunion are letdown and reflection. There were absolute and collegiate "highs." The absolutes are easy to describe: 275 '51ers came back, 42 more than the previous record set by '47; 43% of the Class; by Reunions (with three weeks to go to the end of Annual Giving 1990-91) the Class had set an A.G. record for the 40th. The popular alumni/faculty forums featured 11 classmates on panels.

The collegial aspects of our 40th cannot be reduced easily to numbers, but they had a great deal to do with the fact that 1951 is truly a family. We like each other; our wives—and widows—know and like each other and enjoy being a part of 1951.

What follows is a 40th reunion quickie—a slapdash overview. The details will be laid out in a summer newsletter.

The Thursday night dinner at Penny and Ted Thomas's was outstanding; a cool night with good music. The band was provided by Marti and Bruce Huber and it was good enough to allow '51ers to sit in. Hal Cabot on the keyboard, Stan Bergen and Ed Tilden, drums, and Marty Ill, trombone, performed like pros.

The following were on Friday's forum panels: Dave Chang (the future of Hong Kong); Jack Davison and Reddy Finney (teaching as a marginal profession); By Hollinshead and Walter Clemons (the end of the era of reading and writing); Bill Lee (crafting a national energy strategy); John Ellicott (are trade blocs a threat?); Chip Munro (why aren't our children a higher priority?); Fred Schultz (the S. & L. crisis); Don Stokes (Vietnam, the Gulf, and American culture); and Dan Anderson (health care reform).

The Class's own seminars played to packed houses. Gerontologist Lou Getwicks had an appreciative audience for "Getting Better with Age." Don Stokes introduced Jake Eddy, Ray Close, and Bob Kaseley and their subject, "The Middle East—2001." Their thought-provoking (and depressing) conclusion: expect increasing turmoil over the next 10 years. Dick Murphy's topic, "Wild Geology I Have Known," was an instructive and amusing illustrated romp through the Third World as a consulting petroleum geologist. Dave Chang, with Dick Hammer and Sandy Trowbridge, discussed the current and future outlook for Hong Kong vis a vis the People's Republic.

The Tigerlilies, Nassoons, and Tigertones entertained. So did Herb Strauss, Ford Van Hagen, and assorted Triangle '51ers. Scottish bagpipers and Charlie Huber at the wheel of his '51 Packard led the Class in the P-rade. Our signs honored with photos some of the faculty, staff, administration, and coaches whom we knew as undergraduates and still remember.

A Sunday morning chapel service in the Faculty Room of Nassau Hall was a highlight. Cantor Herb Strauss sang an ancient Hebrew call to worship. Class clerics Law Mudge, John Frederick, Dave Van Dusen, Mary Moore Gaines, Shirley Paxton, and Bill Grady gave prayers or homilies. Eileen Rauschert directed a stunning choir of classmates and wives.

Diana and Ralph Peters's sumptuous Sunday brunch at their gorgeous farm up the Delaware capped four memorable days.

Your officers for the next five years: Bill Brown, president; Nick Wilson, V.P.; Joe Howell, treasurer; and Dick Paynter, secretary, promise to build on the momentum of the last five. They welcome your suggestions and support.

DON OBERDORFER
4630 30th St., N.W.
Washington, DC 20008

Our 39th reunion in June was a spirit-warming potpourri of 40 returned classmates, nearly an equal number of family members, ideal weather conditions, gracious dinner at the Murdochs on Friday night with a serenade by the Tigerlilies, reacquaintance with Class of '51 returnees to their 40th and . . . oh yes . . . the P-rade on a new route with the old heart-stirring crowds. At the P-rade viewing stand, Tom Daubert led a cheer for honorary classmate President Harold Shapiro and for Poss Parham, retiring chairman of Princeton's Alumni Council after two years of outstanding leadership.

The feast was further enriched by several happenings: Don Murray returned, from California, for his first '52 reunion and also to hear a marching song which he composed for Princeton performed by the Princeton Band; Joe Bolster received an Alumni Council Award for service to Princeton and his classmates, but particularly for being "the motive force behind and beside Annual Giving" for 27 years, the third '52er to be given this major award; and Dick Kazmaier was elected alumni trustee at large to the University's Board, the tenth '52er to assume trustee responsibility.

At University graduation ceremonies after the reunion weekend, Jim Baker received an honorary doctor of laws as one who "forged a remarkable record of national leadership over a decade" and who "as a lawyer, politician, and statesman personified the familiar phrase, 'Princeton in the nation's service.'" He is the second '52er to receive an honorary degree from Princeton.

The Class of '52 Executive Committee thanked outgoing committee members at large Bruce Coe, Art Collins, George Hambleton, Don Kahn, Bob Middlebrook and Ed Tiryakian for their years of service, and noted that they were welcome to continue laboring in the Class's vineyards. (Case in point . . . Don Kahn sat in for Don Oberdorfer for the above notes.)

Philadelphia Mini-Reunion Oct. 18-20

Our glorious 38th was. Fred Crispin seems to be mentioned here with some frequency and with some justification, too. Once again Fred and Louise were hosts to our reunion dinner at their home on Friday evening. The weather was perfect and the setting beautiful as usual. There was an excellent turnout and celebrants included: Binder, Dave Brown, Burns, Burr, Cantrell, Connor, Conover, Cooper, Corson, Crispin, Dale, Bill Davis, Frank Decher, Roger Decher, Ejffon, Erdman, Gliardino, Goetschius, Harder, Herr, Lindholm, Ed Mattheus, O'Connell, Runger, Strong, Sutphin, and Thaicher. Also present were numerous wives, children, and significant others. Joining the group the next day at the P-rade were Ellwood, deVunzio, and Kurzman.

This is the last column of the current year, so we would like once again to remind everyone of the mini-reunion in Philly in October. By now everyone should have received Chairman Bemo's program. Those who haven't as yet responded, please do. It looks to be a wonderful weekend.

Speaking of reunions, the 40th committee, chaired by Dick Ellwood, is already hard at work and will be holding working meetings starting in the fall.

Off-year reunions are always a terrific time to catch up with the older and younger classes that bracket '54. This year we gathered with '53, '55, '56, and '58, and it was great fun. One slight problem . . . the Class missed the new P-rade route and was seen going down Prospect Street and turning down at the end of the Cottage Club wall with no one in front of us or behind us. We needed the big dragon to lead the way. In spite of that snafu, the attendance was good and the price was right. Classmates coming back—Connie Stout, Dixon Hills, John Healy, Peter Reese, Eric Jones, Pete Rossmassler, Somers Steelman, John Wood, Norm Fox, Dick Hnat, George Kirby, John Harper, Marty Blume, Rob Briskman, Jerry Ford, Molly Jacobs, Lou Ruker, Edie Eglin, and Sandy Nemtitz.

THE WRAPUP: Fred Mustard Stewart's new novel POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCES came out in June. He is now published in 26 foreign languages. Rob Briskman has formed an engineering consulting firm called TEC located on the Washington Beltway. Bob de Zafra, on leave from S.U.N.Y., is going to Antarctica for another two-month study of the ozone hole . . . then off to Thule, Greenland in Feb. 1992 to look for ozone holes in the Arctic. Responding to gentle pressure from his wife, Dula, Hap Fuller has become the president of New Canaan Nature Center, dedicated to educating people about the environment and the ecology of their surroundings. For best results, keep the chemicals off the lawn and set the mower at 2-2.5 inches.

The Class has lost one of its brightest stars. Three days after being elected chairman of the Atlanta Olympic Games Authority, Harvey Matbis died of a heart attack.

One of the unforgettable events for all members of '54 was Adlai Stevenson's moving speech to the Class in the spring of our graduating year. He said,

"Your days are short here; this is the last of your springs. And now, in the serenity and quiet of this lovely place, touch the depths of truth, feel the hem. You will go away with old, good friends. Don't forget when you leave why you came."

So throttle back . . . smell the roses . . . take stock of where you are today . . . reach out and touch a Princeton buddy (and clean it up for publication) . . . keep swinging, and have a great summer.

Our 36th reunion started auspiciously with a thronged dinner on Friday evening hosted by Judy and Dick Thompson and orchestrated by Dodie Mapes. Eighty-five members of the '55 family attended. Our special speaker was Professor John Fleming '63, master of Wilson College and member of the English Dept. He shared some insights about student attitudes and undergraduate life on campus. John has been invited to be an honorary member of the Class. Welcome to '55, John!

Project 55 occupied much of our time and details will follow in the newsletter. We thank '56 for their warm and splendid sharing hospitality.

Bill Grabam recently has been named president of the American Society for Aesthetic Plastic Surgery. Harry Ward missed our reunion because he was winging his way to Taiwan, where he received an honorary degree, doctor of science, at the Kaohsiung Medical College. Of course, Betty Jo was with Harry.

Competing in the recent Metropolitan Golf Assn. Seniors Championship was John S. Wilson. While John did not win, he was among the leaders, shooting 75-77-152 and was low man among N.J. entrants. In the May 1991 issue of PREMIERS, one of the features is the "100 Most Powerful People in Hollywood." There, on page 81, ranked number 65, is our own Bruce Ramer. Media Mogul John Snyder spotted this article. An entry in the Congressional Staff Directory devotes great detail to the career of Ted Jacobs. Ted is chief counsel to the Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs of the House. Ted has had a long and brilliant tenure in public service, including numerous articles in the N.Y. Times and the Washington Post.

If you are going to be in Nantucket this summer, get in touch with Andy Cowherd '74, 908-273-7266, for details about the P.A.A. of Nantucket Island.

Well, it was just as it says in the old song: we were livin' in the sunlight, lovin' in the moonlight, havin' a wonderful time. Our 35th reunion took place June 6-9, and it lived up to all expectations. The music was great, the weather was perfect, the food was fine, and the company was terrific. As the old Princeton song has it, "they came back from far and near": Pete Oxenbarn from Switzerland; Dick Kluger from Ringoes, N.J.; Hal Levitt from Claremont, Calif.; Andy DeMar from Cincinnati; Bill Lemmon from Lansdale, Penn., and Howie Keller from Hawaii, to name a few. There were 239 of us all together, plus a myriad of wives, friends, children, and grandchildren.

Thursday was a time for gathering together, for feasting on clams and oysters on the half shell, and for checking out our new duds. On Friday our numbers increased, and the proceedings worked to a climax at the evening dinner, with the handing out by Mort Chute of our "distinguished classmate" awards to Yoshio Hatano and Owen Roberts, and V.P. Bob McCartney's presentation of a gift from the Class officers to outgoing president Tom Meeker.

Tom then announced the officers for the next five years, in the persons of President Bob Rodgers, V.P. Tom Fulmer, Secretary Dave Jordan, and Treasurer Fraser Lewis.

Bruce Akers, Al Bertind, Denny Donegan, Yoshio Hatano, John Hofer, Charlie Moskos, Stape Roy, Neil Rudenstine, and Neil Steigbigel were among our classmates participating in alumni/faculty forums. The famous Louisiana Repertory Jazz Ensemble, which played at HQ on both Friday and Saturday nights, gave a well-attended concert on Saturday morning in Alexander Hall, sponsored by the Class and the Alumni Council. The P-rade was made unforgettable by Kirby Holmes's 17-foot-high '56 obelisk, which wheeled down the parade route, its motor rumbling, spewing orange and black smoke, and shooting orange tennis balls marked with the Class numerals out of the top. Saturday's dinner at Jadwin prepared us for another exciting night of Dixieland jazz and an excellent brunch on Sunday.

Classmates who were there (with apologies to any who may be omitted from this list) included, in addition to those previously named, Abell, Agnew, Albrecht, Alden, Aldrich, Ambler, Aron, Aicheson, Bacher, Bancroft, Barclay, Barnett, Bates, Bellin-grath, Bennerup, Bennett, Bodman, Brazell, Brink, Coleman Brown, Pete Buchanan, Burch, Butsch, Bill Campbell, Card, Laurie Castleman, Cave, Dick Clark, Clutz, Conover, Cook, Coward, Crimmins, Culin, D'Arms, Daves, DeCesare, Denkinger, Denny, Dietz, Dillon, Doub, Duffy, Easter, Elliott, Elser, Eschenlauer, Fenno, Flippin, Francis, Freck, Freund, Prosi, Gaillard, Garib, Gaich, Gavin, George, Gerard, Gibb, Gibson, Gillette, Giovino, Dan Goldberg, Goldfinger, Jerry Graham, Ed Gray, Grotto, Bill Halloran, Hammer, Handelsman, Hanna, Hansen, Hoon, Harbeck, Harper, Jim Har-vey, Heber, Heinecke, Helms, Jim Henderson, Henry, Hersey, Heydon, Larry Hicks, Hill, Hirsch, Holbrook, Hollenberg, Horner, Houde, Hui, Dave Jones, Gene Jones, Kaufman, Kerr, Klapperich, Knox, Kopple, Kramer, Kraus, Lagomarsino, Ken Lange, Laukor, Leighton, Leslie, Levey, Lister, Long-streth, Lowry, Lukens, Malitz, Markisobn, Marshall, Masotti, Maiber, Matheus, May, Maybeu, McAusland, McCabe, McCandless, McClelland, McCulloch, McDavitt, McDiarmid, McKeon, McMil-lan, McMillon, McMoran, McNair, Jim McNally, Sandy McNally, Wayne Miller, Mills, Millspaugh, Mobr, Morgan, Morioka, Muench, Muldaur, Nishimura, Obrecht, Dick Osborne, Pardes, George Parker, Paiby, Peabody, Pinch, Plasket, Potter, Pritchard, Quay, Raymond, Reising, Reynolds, Riedlin, Robb, Rosenibal, Rosser, Royes, Rutgers, Sater, Schneiderman, Gordon Schwartz, Mal Sch-wartz, Doug Scott, Scragg, Sbein, Singer, Dave Smith, Kit Smith, Snedeker, Soper, Spalding, Spinelli, Stanley, Stein, Stuard, Susen, Sussman, Sweeney, Tell, Jack Thompson, John Thompson, Tilgner, Updike, Vail, Vanden Heuvel, Varrin, Ve-aich, Vodrey, von Koschimbabr, Von Oebesen, Wachsler, Carter Walker, Walsh, Watson, Waxter, Webber, Weiss, Whitman, Wilkinson, John Wil-iams, Gordon Wilson, John Hill Wilson, Wise, Woo, Yegge, and Ziegler.

Reunions weekend 1991 was a college development officer's dream—perfect weather: no rain, few clouds, and warm with low humidity. Princeton's campus, with its architecture, trees, and gardens was at its absolute summer best.

During the weekend, the Class secretary counted 31 classmates, some with wives or "significant others." Seen were Cuyler, C. James, Fairman, Greenberg, J. Dennis, Baton, Dunn, Horne, Love, Burdette, Robbins, Sussman, VanDusen, G. Porter, L. Ross, Winston, Win-get, Bromley, Hornby, Metcalfe, L. Davis, R. Stern, Sapoch, Ledwith, Kinhead, Bennett, Duffield, C. Smith, Polcer, Farrin, and DeGross. (If some were missed, the secretary apologizes.)

On Friday evening, the traditional Class dinner was held at Cap & Gown Club. The Princeton University Band entertained the assembled group and Bob Bennett and Ralph DeGross suffered from a temporary hearing loss as the percussion section immediately in front of them carried the day. Unfortunately among the missing was Bill Fortenbaugh, described by one classmate as "the epicenter of what Reunions are all about." The Class's "long locomotive cheers" were garbled, because without Bill no one could remember whether there were two or three "booms." A wire to Bill in Amsterdam, Holland, where he was visiting, to answer the question was not responded to.

At the formal part of the dinner, if one could call it that, Dave Greenberg was anointed reunion chairman for our 35th. Volunteers were requested for the reunion function and its associated Annual Giving effort. Special note was made of Mike Love's first attendance at a Princeton reunion and Dick Stern's long-distance travel from Scottsdale, Ariz.

Eddie Polcer and his band led the Class of 1936 in their 55th march in the P-rade.

713 classmates missed out, but the remaining 27 of us were treated to swimming, architectural gazing, and a banquet under the stars at our 32nd reunion dinner hosted by Barbara and Bob Hillier at "Autre-temps," their new home in Center Bridge, Penn.

Partaking in the festivities were Anderson, Aur-bach, Butterworth, Capen, Castellano, Cotter, Dortzbach, Freese, Frele, Grogan, Hoopes, Hoover, Inselbuch, Keuffel, Manischewitz, Mills, Morrison, Proctor, Rock, Schumacher, Seigel, Stang, Swartzburg, Vandermolen, Volckhausen, and Woodhouse. A big locomotive to Reunion Chairman Ed Mills for one of the best off-year reunions ever, and a special thanks to the Hilliers for their gracious hospitality.

Not making it to the dinner, but seen prowling around Reunion headquarters or P-rading, were H. Barton, Bowen, Bouman, Cleaves, East, Iams, Lanza, Lawler, Locks, Slade, Slattery, L. Smith, and J. W. Sullivan. We turned out 40 in all, plus 26 wives/dates, and 19 children—not bad for the last of the "Silent Generation."

Reunions ended on a particularly high note for a number of proud '59 parents as Doug Brown, Ken Dortzbach, Alice Freese, Johnson Garrett, Melissa Hardin, Bill Keuffel, Elizabeth Macaleer, Rachel Manischewitz, Sarah Marzke, Stephen Schomberg, Sara Schumacher, Adrienne Stang, Charles Sullivan, Sharon Volckhausen, Bruce Warden, Morgan Wa-ters, and Josh Zweiback received Princeton diplo-mas on June 11.

Doug Thomas, formerly with WSOC-TV, Char-lotte, N.C., is promoting a two-hour beach music awards TV special, to be aired over southeastern stations this summer.

Thanks to the many '59ers who contributed news during the year. Editorial constraints often require modifications to your submissions, but please know that they are most appreciated. For those who have fallen behind, why not drop us a post-card from your summer vacation spot? We go to press again in September and (to fracture a phrase) would like to hear from some new faces. Reunions abound! Here's John Wallace enjoying one in Atlanta, while Terry Mecray hosted one on Mar. 10 in San Francisco. Attending were: Steve Bar-ber, Walt Berger, Robin Boone, John Ely, Russ Fudge, Allan Griffith, Steve Jett, Mecray, George Peyton, Paul Roberts, Spile Schultheis, Toby Schwartzburg, Bob Stroman, Jay Turnbull, and Paul Warren. Thanks are due to Walt Berger, who organized the whole thing, and to George Peyton, who provided some magnificent wines. Then there was the Apr. 15 Class dinner in N.Y., where Kit Bond spoke about the Persian Gulf crisis and John Cartier and Lee Fuller hosted the event. Fifty-five classmates and spouses or guests attended, including Andrea Richter, our Sachs Scholar, Dennis Sullivan '70, the first Sachs Scholar, and Prof. Charles Gillespie, Hon. '60. Attending were: Charles Durkin, Jeff Beaver, Neil Utman, Robert Wayne, Fuller, Jack Siggins, Thomas Campbell, Robert Sellery, Jean Rousseau, Robert Wood, Bond, Cartier, Art Bellous, Lang Cook, Robert Froelich, Evan Busb, Al Lenzner, Robin Prince, Peter Williamson, Rich McGlynn, Mecray, Phil Detjens, Henry Lord, Donald Stott, Clark Gesner, Web Wheelock, Skip Meislahn, Tod Peyton, Bruce Higgins, Robert King, Cliff Maloney, Ted Hilles, Perry Hall, Dick Hughes. All this in addition to the Alumni Day dinner in February, where Terry Mecray hosted some 40 classmates and progeny currently attending Princeton. There are two rooming groups now at Princeton, both sopho-mores, which contain sons of 1960: 1) Alex South- well, David Hafetz, and Matt Karchmer and 2) Chris Mecray, Tom Tobin, and Erik Tellander.

Jerry Hammond was elected to the American Society of Architects College of Fellows, a great honor in the profession. And Blair Butterworth writes that "politics remains my vocation and avocation. Our firm, FDR Services, was ranked fourth in the nation. And we only do Democrats, so it's quite an accomplishment."

I regret to end the year with an announcement of the death of James Ralph DeRocco. Please send news for coverage in the fall issues of PAW.

GEORGE BRAKELEY III

One-hundred sixty-three classmates, plus a gang of wives, dates, and children descended on Princeton for a gloriously beautiful weekend for our "Themeless Thirtieth." "Best weather in my 30 years of Reunions," said Art Smith, who kept intact his record of never having missed a reunion. Reunion co-chairmen Len Berton and Ken Scasserra and their committee put on a great show all around, about which we will have much more to say in the summer newsletter.

About 35 classmates showed up in 1903 courtyard on Thursday and attended the beginning sessions of the faculty-alumni forums, in which '61ers played a major role throughout the weekend. The evening began with a pig roast under the big tent, with entertainment provided by the Princeton High School Studio Band (featuring Jon Hlafter's son in the trumpet section). Friday saw another 100 or so of us arrive (including Frank Anger for his first reunion, ever). The evening's festivities started with President Shapiro's visit at 6:30, followed by the Class dinner at Dillon. At the dinner, outgoing president Mike Iseman thanked his officers (Veep Joe Prather, Treasurer Larry Brennan, Secretary George Brakeley, Class Agent Fred Hitz, and reunion honchos Berton and Scasserra) and announced the results of the election of our new leaders for 1991-96: as president, Cookie Krongard, and as V.P., Jay Parsons. Cookie forthwith appointed Bob Stanger as our new treasurer, and George Brakeley will stay on as secretary.

Mike also announced some great news—John Bjorkholm has been named an alumni trustee of the University, the details of which are elsewhere in this issue. Our congratulations to John.

That evening we were entertained by the Skyline Drive band, alternating with the Marvelettes (including a vocal by Jim Greenberg's daughter Sue Ellen, a professional entertainer).

Saturday morning was recovery time. Another 30 or so classmates arrived, and many of us scattered about the campus for the F/A forums, the jazz concert, an alumni athletic event, or any one of a number of other goings-on. At 1 p.m., the Class picture was taken on the steps of Clio (first time many of us had ever figured out which one is Clio), followed by the one and only P-rade. Don Kornrumpf and Jay Webster led us in one locomotive after another for the classes passing by (most of whom failed to respond; were there a prize for noisiest class in the P-rade we'd have won hands down). Best P-rade sign, compliments of '56: "We stand as vindication of mystery meat."

Recovery time again, and then to the New South area for a delightful dinner under the tent. The evening's entertainment was provided by the Hot Nuts and Ivory Jim Hunter (great job by entertainment chairman Jim Blair). The weekend ended with a Sunday morning brunch at DeNunzio Pool down by Jadwin, and then to airports, trains and cars with the fun, friendship, and esprit of Reunions fresh in our memories. Some weekend. Some class.

THE TWENTY-NINTH REUNION: Those attending our annual Class Reunions dinner at the Springdale Country Club (with wives or guests) include: Phil Allen, Drew Berry, Ariel DePontet, Jeanne and Tom Everngam, Nancy and Joe Irenas, Steve Jaffe and Shelly Kolikow, Celia and Mike Matheus, Mike McConibe, Mary and Bob Medina, Arthur Monroe, Al Muller, Sandy and Sam Reiken, Tom Schmidt and guest, Linda and Bill Swain and Erik Swain '93, Ed Weibenmayer and guest, Taylor Woodward and Barbara Hauter, and Patti and Bink Wurts. Our esteemed President gave his time-honored State of the Class address, "having escaped from an Italian jail this year to attend the dinner."

Classmates who did not attend the dinner but who signed our Class book include: Sandy Ackley, Al Barr, Barry Bosak, Phil Carlin, Warren Crane, John Hibschman, Ivory Jim Hunter, Al Kaemmerlaen, Penn Laird, Charlie Lighdale, Scott Magargee, Drayton Nabers, Rip Noble, Joel Pensley, Courtney Pitt, Bob Wadsworth, and Tom Wright. For once it didn't rain during Reunions.

Bill Swain reports the first meeting to plan our 30th next year was held during Reunions. "We have a great deal to do, but the Class should have a marvelous time next year." It's difficult to believe our 30th is so near at hand! Lay those plans now—we hope to see everyone in the Class back.

We regret to report that Alan W. Carlson died June 4, 1990.

This spring there were two reunions of note, one at Princeton in the second weekend of June, the other on the second weekend in May in the Napa Valley, celebrating "63 turning 50." Jay Schroeder, who attended both affairs, supplied ample notes.

The May weekend at Napa Valley's Meadowood Resort was designed by Phoebe and Neil Olcott, Betsy and Bob Stafford, Vickie and John Duff, Leida and Buck Farmer, and Elisa and Tom Simmons. In attendance were over 25 classmates, accompanied by spouses and partners. They golfed, tennised, croqueted, hiked, ate delicious meals and sampled fine wines. As Stafford reported, "It was a wonderful reminder of what special friendships we were privileged to have made at Princeton, and how easily they can be rekindled."

At Princeton, shades of things to come, we were housed with '61's 30th. The highlight, other than the rerouted P-rade, was the off-year tradition of Saturday night dinner graciously organized and hosted by neighbors Laurie and Steve Derochi and Julie and Bill Hardt. Of course, reunions diehards Ernie Dreber, Bob Zagoria, Scotty Marsh, Bryce Chase, and Arlyn Lichtbardi were there, but so were some new faces, such as Tom Marsh, Ed Berkelhammer, and Dave Barrett. A total of over 30 classmates.

A pack of Class children graduated a few days later. They were Margaret Borod, Lindsay Bray, Josh Carter, Jennifer Conaban, Matt Edelman, Valerie Feinberg, Marty Felsenthal, Blair Haarlow, David Haddock, Rachel Henrich, Erica Hernquist, Rachel Kadish, Lawrence Kaplan, Ellen Kimma-

Han, Joshua Klausner, Kay Long, Jeff Sensabaugh, Katie Van Possen, and Kirsten Wood. Alan Crouther, who finished in October, missed last year's list.

And finally, you will notice elsewhere in this magazine that Dick Kazmaier '52 was elected alumni trustee. Your Class secretary was honored to have been on the ballot with such company as Dick and Karl Hammonds '73. Thanks for all the kind words and support.

Bruce Blair, who lives now in Chicago and had been "lost" to the University since 1979, was one of a good group of '64ers in town for our 27th reunion. Also on hand for the lectures, the schmoozing, the P-rade and the Class dinner, hosted again so generously by Anne and Dick Henry, were Phil Abrams, Tim Burman, Lloyd Carver, John Caillet, Jeff Cropsey, Richard Dixon, Jim Fisher, Dick Getnick, Skip Grenoble, Tom Hirst, Jay Hughes, Jud Jennings, Jo Johnson, George Kbouri, Jim Klauder, Doug Kheuer, Rob Kuser, Bf Mallach, Murray Mathews, George Minich, Chuck Moran, Terry Mort, Bill Most, Ed Murphy, Tim Newsens, Fred Pearson, Phil Peck, Peter Polatin, Buddy Propet, Homer Russell, Dick Scott, Gerry Shey, Terry Smith, Renny Thompson, Bill Walker, Rob White, Rick Wright, Tom Young, and John Zumbrunn. Messrs. Mallach and Propet were celebrating the graduation of children in the Class of 1991. Messrs. Newsens and Zumbrunn have sons in the entering Class of 1995, and the Henrys graduated a daughter and will enroll a second daughter in the fall. Congrats to all!

Though he was not at Reunions, Peter Brownrigg, who started with 1964 and finished with 1965, has rejoined 1964's ranks and is now living in the Baltimore area.

At the Class meeting on Reunions Saturday, the subject of future mini-reunions came up and those in attendance voted to hold a reunion in the San Francisco Bay area in Apr. 1992. Other suggested destinations included Nantucket, the San Juan Islands of Puget Sound, the Caymans, the Turks & Caicos Islands, and Ireland. If the San Francisco weekend, or any of the other possible reunion sites, is of interest to you, and/or you'd be willing to help coordinate the arrangements, please give Bill Walker a call weekdays at 215-981-0382.

Kenny Goldman writes from L.A. that his daughters will be attending Penn and Emory in the fall, that he's coaching soccer for the 13th year and practicing real estate and tax law, and that all is well. Hope all is well with all of you. Enjoy the summer.

It wasn't the beach at Iwo Jima, but our 26th reunion required and rewarded bravery, stamina, and determination. The day was perfect, the new P-rade route loses out on some tradition—the beauties of McCosh Walk and Prospect Street in particular—but there are plenty of compensations (like your feet aren't ready to fall off when you get to the end of this route) and many good spots from which to watch. Our turnout was excellent and included several classmates not seen at reunions in recent years, always a welcome sign. The honor roll of attendees, in order of signup, is as follows: Van Williams, Doug Brady, Bill (C.) Scott, John Marsden, Marv Cbeiten, Harry Reischer, Ron Watson, Lynn Klotz, Chuck Creesy, Rick Ober, Ed Sylvester, Ed Tenner, Andy Brauer, Dick Brown, Harvey Clapp, Dick Woodbridge, Jay Putnam, Gus Blanchard, John O'Brien, Cosmo Iacavazzi, Harry Reischer, Mike Parish, Dan Kleinman, Tony Nuland, Rob Norton, Dave Keyes, Tom Curton, Jake Jacobsen, Phil Friedman, Sam Rosen, Griff Sexton, Ralph Fawcett, Bill Wolfe, Ruth Haines, Alan Platt, Joel Rudell, John Garber, Rocky Townsend, Paul Dylestra, and Dan White. Close readers will observe that Harry Reischer signed in twice, perhaps signalling that he had twice as much fun as the rest of us, but that would have been hard to accomplish considering the generally high standard of fun that prevailed, both at the Class cookout courtesy of Rick Ober at his palatial new abode and at the other proceedings, such as the 4-1 Dial Lodge contingent victory over the University women's softball team. The stars in memory of Dave Hackett (121 Foulke) and Steve Kelsey (113 Lockhart) are now properly affixed to the windowills of their dorm rooms as previously promised.

On the news front, Gus Blanchard has cut the apron strings and left N.J. for Downer's Grove, Ill. (where Ken Jensen also lives) to become chairman and C.E.O. of Peach Tree Bancard Corp.

Don't forget to have a great summer.

Our "one and only" 25th reunion is now history. What remains is a vivid remembrance of constant activity, connection and reconnection, and an orange-and-black throng flowing, under perfect N.J. skies, to the rhythm of Reunions weekend. What follows is a series of verbal snapshots of the celebration of the first quarter-century since our graduation.

SCENES FROM THE CLASS DINNER: President Shapiro's observation that we serve Princeton by what we do to support the University, by how we contribute to the University, but, most of all, by how we conduct our lives... The debut of our reunion costume... Almost 400 of us, with spouses and significant others, resplendent in black blazer with orange piping, white slacks, genuine boaters and an orange how tie... Help from those, like Nancy Hansmann, who really knew how to tie the how tie... Dan Skvir's beautiful words in remembrance of those classmates who have been taken from us by death... Turk Thacher, who has led the Class with distinction and commitment since 1981, passing the mantle of authority to Bob Nabas and being heaped with "honor rolls" by his adoring constituency... John Edie—incoming V.P., lauding Dick "Tiny" Morgan and his Reunion Committee for their virtuoso performance in organizing the reunion and introducing him as "Tiny Dick" Morgan... Bud D'Avella's stirring tribute to Carol Thacher, Betty Lou Morgan, and Dorothy Plohn for their support to the Class... Thanks and praise for Thacher, Morgan, and Charlie Plohn, who are stepping down as Class officers.

SCENES FROM THE P-RADE: The Class of 1966 goes where no class has gone before and blazes a new trail... We left Blair-Joline courtyard, snaked between Joline and Holder, walked up University Place to Nassau Street and re-entered the campus through FitzRandolph Gate, which, in our time, was open only for commencement... We marched along an eerily subdued parade route with curious but mute on-lookers and passed under a floating, helium-filled tiger onto Poe field... We flooded the bleachers (appropriately named, given the blazing sun and 90-degree weather) and then, under the direction of Morgan, Sias Maliszewski, and Richie Thomas, bellowed out over 100 lusty locomotives to those following in our footsteps to Poe field... The first to follow was Arthur Holden '12, 100 years old and a spine-tingling inspiration to us all... The last to follow were the 1100 members of the Class of 1991 who were formally welcomed into the alumni ranks.

SCENES FROM THE REUNION SITE: Constant conversations in ever-shifting patterns of twos, threes, and four or more... Glenn Goltz, using a highlighter on passages from Jim Merritt's superlative 25th Year Book, and then asking the author what he meant by a particular passage... Many, like Pete Wylie, obviously enjoying their first reunion since graduation... Don Delist, George Haight, Jeff McCollum, and Tim Smith, who entered Princeton together from the same Pittsburgh high school, getting together again... 1500 pounds of crayfish, donated by crayfish rancher and psychiatrist Nelson Hendler, tickling our imagination and our palate... Tomato juice for Tiny... A terrific childcare service orchestrated by Steve Krom... A 25-minute walk/run organized by Terry Seymour... John Simpson's self-described "obstreperous" behavior intended to fire up the Class for its portrait.

SCENES FROM OTHER VENUES: Class members participating in the alumni-faculty forums... Bob Harsh and Skvir on alcoholism, a staggering problem nationally and on the Princeton campus today... William Martin on national energy strategy... Carl Corey on urban schools... Robert Seely on trade blocs... Lamar Smith on the S. & L. crisis. Participants in '66's mid-life panels... John Kretzmann, Lanny Jones, Peter Wilson, and T.R. Reid (also heard practicing his Japanese in the P-rade) reviewing the results of the joint Princeton-Smith '66 poll... Carl Feldbaum and Barbara Goltz on career changes... Hendler and Harsh on the challenges of teenage years... Bob Goldie, John McDonough, and J.T. Beatty on estate planning... Louis Reich, Rick Bradstreet, and Betty Wilson on changing roles in the home/work environment... Bill Leaby, Edie and Ken Oboz on the challenges of an aging society.

In 1962, we arrived at Princeton as a collection of "well-rounded" young men. In 1991, we reconvened as a collection of middle-aged men pursuing disparate career interests, bound together by a four-year experience called Princeton.

From Intime to "thirtysomething"

WITH THE RECENT cancellation of ABC's award-winning thirtysomething, a TV series that followed a group of well-educated friends from Philadelphia through their marriages, careers, and babies—and many of the attendant traumas that don't often get written up in the Class Notes—I thought it was high time to check in with Winnie Holzman '76, the program's executive story editor since last winter.

Holzman, a poetry major from Long Island while in college, says she didn't do any editing for the show, but she did write scripts and have some say in the way they were produced—three during the 1989-90 season, her first, and a remarkable "six and a half" out of the twenty-two screened in 1990-91.

Talking over the telephone in her high, sweet voice, Holzman comments that she has had "an odd career. It's been completely instinctual." After spending a "wonderful, incredibly positive" four years at Princeton writing poetry ("my first love") and performing at Theatre Intime, she studied acting at The Circle in the Square, a theater in New York City. One of her classmates there was Ken Olin, who later played Michael Steadman in thirtysomething. Holzman and three other classmates formed a comedy group called Serious Bizness, and she acted in off-Broadway and off-off-Broadway theaters. In the early eighties, she attended New York University, where she earned an M.F.A. in musical theater. She then wrote Birds of Paradise, a musical that "did not run long" off-Broadway. "It's okay, I rallied," she says.

In 1984, Holzman married the actor Paul Dooley (Breaking Away, Paternity), whom she had met when they were improvising a comic soap opera together. Their daughter Savannah was born in 1985, and they moved to California in 1988, when Dooley was offered the Coming of Age series.

Out west, Holzman met Richard Kramer, one of thirtysomething's producers. Having "vaguely heard of my work," he invited her to write a script "on speculation," which meant that Kramer was not obliged to pay Holzman if the script was not filmed. "Of course, I was petrified, because it meant so much to me." Three months later, she turned in her script. "Richard called me very quickly. He was so kind. I was hired within a few weeks. It really doesn't ever happen this way."

Among the episodes she wrote that aired this season was "The Guilty Party," which she developed from her original script. The story is about Hope Steadman, who was created as a Princeton graduate before Holzman joined the show, and the "terrible prison" of her perfectionism. In this episode, Holzman used Hope's educational background not for autobiographical purposes, but to explore an issue she considered important: "What are you supposed to have accomplished if you went to Princeton? We never ever think in terms of topics, of what's the hot topic. We write about what's interesting to us, using the truth in our lives, the emotional reality, not necessarily the facts. It was a goal to have people be touched emotionally."

In the episode "I'm Nobody, Who Are You?," a character grapples with teaching "one of the few people who's famous for being a nobody"—Emily Dickinson—and questions his own success. This and other scripts were recently published in thirtysomething Stories, a book whose proceeds will support AIDS research. Another of Holzman's stories featured her friend Mark Nelson '77 in a guest role. Holzman herself appeared briefly, as a psychiatrist, in an episode written by someone else.

According to Holzman, thirtysomething always had "good demographics," but not great ratings. With the show's demise, she says, "I'll probably try to write a movie, and I'd like to work in television, hopefully with some of the same people." There's also the possibility that another series, based on the Melissa Steadman character, will be spun off the original show. One of Holzman's episodes this season could be that series' point of departure. "My immediate plan," Holzman says, "is to convince myself that I can write. I'm always terrified." As for a return to the theater, she quips, "I prefer to be compensated for my work." But overall, she is optimistic, the antithesis of the whining yuppies the thirtysomething characters have occasionally been accused of being. "I do try to be positive. It's so much better. What is to complain about? Not that I don't complain . . ."

Mark your calendars: June 3-6, 1993. That's when you will mark the quarter-century since leaving the orange-and-black city as a graduate of Princeton. What better way to celebrate, and contemplate, than to go back to the spires, the ivy, the places and the faces where the orange-brick road began?

It was the place where we found friends, knowledge, perspective, tools, tradition and perhaps the beginnings of wisdom. In these last 25 years, those seeds have grown and we have become more resourceful, more resilient, more effective, more aware, more wise; we've all become wizards, in a way. And the wizards are going back to OZ (not).

Forty-one of us returned to the orange-and-black city for our 23rd reunion: Bedell, Bosley, Botzow, Britt, Budney, Byers, Chase, Clark, Cramer, P. Detweiler, Dickey, Dietz, Doyle, Fleming, Gore, Gratton, G. Harrison, Hess, Hinds, Hollander, Humphrey, Kalmbach, Kerney, Lynn, Mitchell, O'Connell, Oznot, Peters, B. Peterson, Platten, Potter, Richer, Rubin, Sessa, Torbert, R. Weber, Webster, Weissberger, Whelan, Wisnack, and Zisler.

Any oversights or those seen who weren't there may be attributed to the secretary's failing intellect, vision, and penmanship.

Class dinner was great fun. Andy Brown reported Annual Giving going well; X. Shannon reported Class Scholar Patricia Lin graduated and that a new recipient must be chosen. Clay McKelowney gave the Annual Screw-up Award to Jim Blackburn, who showed up for Reunions a week early last year, for showing up a week late, he anticipated, this year. Long Distance Award went to Jim Gregoire who flew in from Bermuda for the occasion. Clay also scheduled a first organizational meeting for our 25th.

Chuck Freyer noted 390 people have paid Class dues, and Jim Gregoire reported nearly $500,000 in accumulated assets in our Memorial Fund Drive. Niel Lewis, reporting for himself, and Neal Grenley noted that our Renewal Book Fund at the library is about to begin: books will be restored for each deceased classmate and the first 28 will be presented soon. A Class dinner this winter will be held at Princeton. Details to follow. The Footnotes entertained us, and we scattered in many directions filled with fine feelings. Happy Summer to all.

Heard at our 21st: seventy-pede strutted again! The Class received the Clancy Award for Best-Run Reunion, 1990, and a dues award for highest participation.

BABY NEWS: Bob Mickle and Marg Baker boast of Paul; Kiyomi and Mike Camp added Charlotte Midori to their number; Ted Esbach and wife, Heidi, welcomed son Glenn to their home; Nancy and Stu Benihover received Tori Elizabeth for a 1990 deduction; Christina Lauren Mauney became Kelli's fifth! Rayna and Ed Labowitz smile about their son, Shane; and last but definitely not least, Donna and Rudy Fernandez welcomed David into their home. What a productive Class!

BELIEVE IT OR NOT DEPT.: Dr. James Tang took up golf around the time of our graduation, and now has three holes-in-one to his credit! Robert Gray is now pursuing a degree in environmental engineering at the Univ. of Rhode Island. Tom Stetger told his new wife, Joanne Loving, "not to throw away anything orange and black unless it's moldy." With a degree in comparative lit and cultural anthropology, Robert Rockwell is now technical director with Eureka Software Factory in Berlin; Darrel Wiard and Jim Nixon attended the New Orleans Jazz Festival and found they could still party for 72 hours straight; Andy Johnston is managing and liquidating real estate as a contractor for the Resolution Trust Corp.; another making the best of a bad situation is Zack Clement, at Fulbright and Jaworski in Houston, who spends lots of time in Wilmington, Del., for Continental Airlines; Alan Lightman's recent book, ORIGINS: THE LIVES AND WORLDS OF MODERN COSMOLOGISTS, won the Assn. of American Publishers award for most outstanding book in physical science. Tom Roy and family moved to Hong Kong as V.P. of corporate affairs for Michelin; and Marine Reserve Commander Drew Davis was called up from Chicago for a Desert Storm stint in the Philippines, where a sign reads, "Beware of Joggers" and Monkeys."

Sad to report Toby Geer has died; a memorial will follow in a future issue.

Thanks to all whose news has been squeezed into these columns.

REUNIONS REPORT: What can you say? As promised, Reunion Chairman Robby Browne produced "the best 20th reunion ever." The Class of 1971 responded with record-setting attendance: 301 classmates. Our theme this year, "Save the WILD Life," won many converts among classmates and other classes, and truly reflected our spirit "only" 20 years out. Unlike the "old guard classes" (that is, '70 and earlier) and some classes that are prematurely slowing down (in other words, '72 and up) we've maintained our youthful outlook on life. Special thanks go to Gay and Doug Blair, who, with the help of Kevin Warner, developed the theme and uniform, and to Marilyn Murphey Machin, for her inspired artwork (including the logo here) which captured the spirit so well.

There were numerous featured events. These included alumni-faculty forums (speakers included Jared Kisting on the end of the era of reading and writing; Jim Henderson on the generation at risk in our public schools; Alan Brinkley on the meaning of Vietnam and the Gulf for American culture; Gene Lowe on political correctness at Princeton; and Jeff Marshall on the savings and loan crisis). There was an imaginative program for children developed and executed under the supervision of Susie and Scott Alexander. Impresario Bill Awecher arranged a wide spectrum of entertainment, from the first Reunions reunion of Peacock's Crossing, with original members Alfie Ceraso (P.H.S. '69), Dave Fisher '69, Jack Craynock, James Macbitt, Dan Masys, and Marc Stuart (Marc's professional group, Dash Rip-rock and the Dragons, also played at the fifth and the 25th reunions), to undergraduate a cappella singing groups, the Tigerlilies, Nassoons (see last issue), and Footnotes (with David Chamberlain, Russell Baker, Robbie Haines, and Ernest Pittman.) The Reunions Committee designated Kathy Molony and Rich Hollingsworth as winners of the Goodyear Award for the most miles logged on the dance floor. Our Saturday night band, The Trend, won the Alumni Council award as the best band on campus. Once again (for the fourth time) 1971 was the last reunion to close.

Despite considerable trepidation over the P-rade's new, exclusively on-campus route, it is still "the one and only," if only because of the way all Princeton's classes wind through one another, celebrating their shared Princeton experiences across the generations. Ironically, the shorter route seemed to take as long or longer than the old route down Prospect Avenue. Ed Milne organized the P-rade in spectacular fashion for 1971, and we were declared the second-best entry in the P-rade (behind '46 and tied with '66).

The Class of 1971 was well served by a hard-working and fun-loving undergraduate crew of 14, supervised by Site Chairman Jim Henderson and led by Steve Rich '91 and Hope MacKay '92. Registration was splendidly coordinated once again by Bill McCartney, assisted by Pam Addison '92. Podie

In the photo you may recognize Joseph David Oznot and his lovely second wife, Dorothy. Znot was remarkably cool despite his new-found notoriety as one of the Wizards of Oznot. All the wizards in attendance agreed that all 800 of us will return as the Wizards of Oznot in 1991. We will return to the place "where one can dare to dream, a place between now and eternity, a place to capture the timelessness of friendship and measure the real meaning of a common history."

The 22nd reunion may not be the most important, but for the Class of 1969 in the year 1991, it was a special occasion. The sun was shining, the breezes were blissful, and the new P-rade route was pretty satisfactory as well. During the course of the weekend, one place or another, surrounded by friends and families, we saw Reunion Czar Clay McKelowney, X. Shannon, Terry Wintroub, Tom Weidner, Graham Hunter, Joe Marshall, Jerry Mosher, Jeff Marston, Jim Floyd, Frank Wilson, President

Lynch handled all aspects of publicity. The Class Book was published on schedule and within budget to the amazement of just about everybody. We give great credit to its editors, Marie and Rich DiFidele (with assistance from Jeff Marshall and Robbie Wyper Shell). We again demonstrated that fine dining is possible during Reunions at our annual Class dinner. Once again, Miles Reiter provided huge (we're talking billiard-ball size here), delicious strawberries from his California farm.

At 1971's annual meeting, you elected new Class officers to steward Class affairs for the next five years leading up to our own (gulp) 25th reunion in 1996. (Significantly, this will also be Princeton's 250th anniversary). Outgoing officers Murphey Harmon, Keith Rabe, Kevin Baine, and Larry Joacbm were honored with huzzahs and only a few projectiles from the audience. Our new President Steve Powers was heard to say "I guarantee even more and better Class activities in the five years ahead. And, I challenge each classmate to participate in Class activities in some way—large or small—whether you make the effort to attend Reunions, our annual fall football meeting, one of our regional mini-reunions, or some other special event; or you work on Annual Giving, the Class Foundation, or Class dues campaigns; or you help to plan one of our various Class activities." Other officers elected included Jack Hittson, V.P.; Henry Barkhorn, treasurer; Rich Ferrugio and Stu Richerson, reunions co-chairmen; and Art Louenstein, Class secretary.

CLASS FOUNDATION: Brookes Billman, outgoing president of the Class of 1971 Foundation, reported that it is in good shape, but of course would be in even better condition with your thoughtful donation. His successor, Bill McCarter, said that so far the foundation has donated books to Firestone Library in memory of all classmates who have died since our graduation. Since 1987, the foundation has also funded scholarships for students to attend Princeton. Already, two children of Class members have been beneficiaries of Class foundation scholarships. Bill promises that you will year more about the foundation in the next five years, as we approach our 25th reunion.

ANNUAL GIVING STATUS: Through June 9, contributions are within hailing distance of our goal of $1,271,000 (to capture our fourth-consecutive major reunion record) and 71% participation. As you'll recall, the Class of 1971 was the FIRST Princeton class to set an All-Ivy giving record at our tenth. This time, the Class of 1971 has already set one Princeton record, as nine of our classmates established the largest challenge gift in Princeton's history, over a quarter of a million dollars. We think we may have another record, with (already) nearly 150 classmates contributing at least $1,000 each.

MEMORIAM: We are saddened to report that our classmate and friend, Jon L. Selden, died Apr. 10, 1991. Our condolences to Gloria. A memorial will appear in a future issue.

TREMENDOUS TURNOUT FOR THE 19TH REUNION: Forty-eight members of the Class, with spouses, kids, friends, and fiancés, came to our 19th reunion, an incredible showing, one year before the big 20th. The dinner Friday night at Valerie and Bill Sharpstone's was, as every year, a very enjoyable and elegant evening. Next year, for the 20th, our Friday evening Class dinner is tentatively scheduled to be held on the grounds of Morven, the former N.J. governor's mansion. Speaking of the 20th, it will be in the Brown-Dod courtyard, June 4-6, 1992.

FROM OXFORD TO TEWANTIN: Charles Scalise is continuing his sabbatical at the University of Oxford.

His two boys, David and Daniel, have been thriving on the experience, including developing very proper British accents. Rick Tomlinson writes from upstate N.Y., near the Canadian border, where he is a kindergarten teacher by day and a county legislator by night. Rick notes there is synergy between the two professions, due in part to the similarity in the demands of five-year-olds and county government. In Florida, Ed Hampden and his wife, Barb, and their three children will soon be relocating to Orlando. Ed has left Trammel Crow Co. in Tampa, after ten years, and has joined a Dutch real estate investment company in Orlando, where he will be the chief operating officer. Until their move this summer, Ed will be commuting 90 miles to work each day. In N.Y., John Cross has been promoted to managing director and head of J.P. Morgan Securities' leveraged finance group. John and his wife, Mary, have a son, Robert (born Oct. 27, 1988), and live in Larchmont, N.Y. Finally, Chris Reeve in Teawantin, Queensland, Australia, extends an invitation to any rat-racers seeking to escape to some of the world's best beaches. Chris has been fishing more and more and managing to "get up the beach" to Fraser Island with Jenny and the children. He says he does not catch much but he's having a lot of fun trying.

Photos of new additions to the '73 family abound: We start with Nicole Christie Condit (photo), born Feb. 22, 1991, to Margaret, Dave, Amanda (4), and Matthew (2), the latter three pictured (photo) as well. Dave is still tending the legal affairs of A.T. & T. and living in Chester, N.J.

Marcia, Mike (7), and Jim Kelley welcomed Jimmy Jr. (photo) to the world last May 20. Jim is managing attorney at Dime Savings Bank of N.Y. Jim Jr. sports what could be our 20th reunion headgear.

Other happy announcements include: Lynne and Jon Latson's son, Spenser Davis, who joined Laura (5) and Christian (2) on May 14, 1991. Jon and Lynne are in charge of all computers at the Wheeler School in Providence. Jon is in the second year of an N.S.F. grant at Brown Univ. to develop computer use in teaching biology.

Katherine Holden enjoyed the birth of her first child, Nathanial Jaffe on Feb. 24, 1991. She has left her pediatrics practice to live with her husband in northwestern Connecticut.

Pat '75 and Steve Carlson welcomed their third daughter, Julie, on Feb. 6, 1991. Steve is a trial lawyer at Sidley & Austin in Chicago. Yet more arrivals: Chandler Elise Moeller on May 11, 1991, to Wendy and Rad. Son Carsten to Dan Blackman on May 31, 1990.

GOIN' BACK '91: Juanita James and Emmy nominee Juliet Packer (pictured here) make lovely models for the finest in casual Reunions wear. These handsome and sturdy fashions—essential to the wardrobe of the '74er-about-town—also come in men's sizes and are still available from one of the most exclusive attics (or should that be attiques?) in Kendall Park, N.J.

Class banner-bearers John Horan and Botwell Lee led a strong band of 29 classmates, fortified by spouses, offspring, and guests, along the new P-rade route, which was found to do a fine job of eliminating those unsightly gaps in the P-rade line of march. Bothwell maintained his perfect record of Reunions attendance, as did Alan Bouser, Peter Choptusky, Ginny Corson, and Roger Mebner. However, another classmate, who shall remain name-LESs, sLlppEd from those enVIABle heights of perfection.

Also on hand were Martba Gray Billman, David Bortner, Steve Brown, Karl Chandler, Andy Cowberd, Steve Crandall, Bill First, Carl Gustafson, Ron Levine, Keith Mackay, Mike Matejek, Kinsley Morse, Kate Rooney, Bob Schmon, Lisa Schmucki, Rob Schuman, David Seitman, John Stryker, Will Swigart, Bill Walton, and Wendy Zabarko.

Congratulations go to Ginny Corson, winner of the Alumni Council Award for Service to Princeton, and to Jon Barfield and Bill Frist, who have both been named to ten-year terms as charter trustees.

We had a good turnout at our 16th reunion for the P-rade, Class party, and other festivities. As we chewed the fat at the Class party (is it a sign of encroaching age that most of us discovered we welcomed a chair after the P-rade?), people began to speculate about the number of classmates who have attended every reunion since graduation. Because our records are sketchy and because some people come for the P-rade and do not officially register, we do not really know how many "streaks" we have. If you have attended every reunion, or all but one, please drop the Class secretary a note telling your record. We'll publish results later.

Accounted for this year were: Juliet Beier, Charlie Brown, Jeffrey Butterfield, Steve Caputo, Marc Cavaille-Coll, Janet Morrison Clarke, Jim Corsones, Dan Dempsey, Jim Eiszner, Elizabeth English, Erilia Zolt Gaudry, Sheira Greenwald, Aaron Harber, Curt Hayden, Bill Keller, Mark Kowal, Sal Lalama, Jeffrey Lewis-Oakes, Franklin Lowe, Robert Martinez, Kathleen McCleery, John Mesrobian, Lissa Kiser Mesrobian, Dave Moore, Chas Rissel, Karen Holditch Ristuccia, Matt Ristuccia, Mike Schiffres, Ed Seliga, Barbara Seneca, Esther Costel Tamplin, Ward Tomlinson, Kevin Toner, David Uffelman, John Ward, Dave Wright, Dennis Yao, and Alan Zelicoff.

Aaron Harber flew back from Munich to get to Princeton, with a brief stop in Denver en route. Alan Zelicoff, back east from Albuquerque, was making his first visit back to Princeton for Reunions. Mary Miller was busy delivering a lecture in Philadelphia but kindly sent husband Ed Kamens and son Bill Kamens (4) as proxies.

We have received the sad news of Jason Richardson's death May 13. A memorial will follow.

We did it again! With 353 classmates returning for our 15th reunion on June 6-8, we set an all-time 15th reunion attendance record and continued our record-setting ways. Attendees will be listed in a summer newsletter.

Things got off to a pleasant start on Thursday afternoon with a tour of the newly renovated Art Museum followed by a cocktail party there, catered by Tamsen Granger, who also supervised most of our food requirements. Candace Conway Fleming coordinated beverages. The evening continued with dancing at our reunion site in Little-Edwards courtyard to the sounds of "The Authority."

The next day many classmates played in the Friends of Princeton Golf tournament. Bill Sauch garnered the tournament's best low net score (64) and was second for low gross (72). Don Foster had the third low gross score (73), and Mark Muenschow and Josh Libresco took low net (57) honors in the men's two-man best ball category.

Friday also saw a Class softball game organized by Bob Ruxin and two Class-sponsored tennis tournaments organized by Mike Mohynaux. Bill Wilson and Margi Evans (Weller's wife) took top honors in the "Hit and Giggle" mixed doubles tournament, followed by Elizabeth Ramsey (Tom's wife) and Jay Gamze. First prize in the Hard Core mixed doubles tournament went to Joan and Don Pettit, second prize to Lindsay Pomeroy and Louise Gengler '75, and third prize to John and Jukka Haller Gottsch.

Seventy-six was well represented on panel discussions held on Friday and Saturday. Speaking on topics ranging from international relations and trade to teaching and health care reform were Dora Lee, Dori Jones Yang, Tom Pyle, Carol Hasson, Melanie Lawson, Wanda Ward, Josh Bolten (who, by the way, came up with the "Fifteen-All" theme), Margie Lewis Cross, and Dale Matthews.

Friday evening at New South, the Hopewell Fire Dept. catered a sumptuous outdoor dinner complete with corn-on-the-cob, steamed clams, and heaps of shrimp. Back at the tent we were paid a visit by honorary classmates William and Mary Ellen Bowen. The evening's music came from "The Trend," which later won the Reunions prize for best party band. There was nearly a riot when, midway through "Shout," the proctors literally pulled the plug on the band in order to enforce a borough ordinance restricting loud noise after 2 A.M.

On Saturday morning we gathered on the Blair Arch steps for our Class picture. By then most of us had donned our "Fifteen-All" tennis-theme costume which Bib Fiske and the people at Banana Republic put together. The P-rade that followed took a new route laid out entirely on the campus, and we were led by a wonderfully clamorous steam calliope playing Princeton songs.

Our Class dinner, organized by Charlene Cosman and Charlie Bell, followed in a sauna-like Dillon Gym. President Shapiro addressed us briefly and Bob Ireland announced our three new honorary classmates, Nancy Maloney, Cornel West, and Sally Wilson. We heard reports on Annual Giving from Class Agent Mimi Murley, on the 2001 Fund from Al Hurley and Luke Roth, and on the Class Book from Kristin White. We had hoped our dinner guest would be actress Mel Harris, who plays "thirty something" 's Hope Steadman, a fictitious member of our Class. Her shooting schedule precluded a personal appearance, but she graciously prepared an audio tape called "Hope Remembers," scripted by Charlie Bell, which was played at the end of dinner. Mike Reldy announced the election results for new Class officers: Mimi Murley, president; Linda Johnson, V.P.; Sally and Bill Wilson, treasurers; and Pete Speth, secretary. After dinner, "Kivetsky" drove the dancing.

Pete Speth and Tom Raleigh, our reunions co-chairmen, deserve hearty thanks for their tireless efforts in organizing a record-setting, tremendously successful "Fifteen-All" reunion. They were ably assisted by others, some of whom have already been mentioned. In addition, special thanks go to Doug Mallach '91, our undergraduate reunion chairman, and his enthusiastic staff. Stalwart Dan Cronheim oversaw our P-rade participation, coordinated off-campus housing, and attended to countless details. Betsy and Buddy Haas deserve high marks for the children's activities they coordinated.

77 ON P-RADE—The University changed the route, but that did not stop a big contingent from marching in the first all-on-campus P-rade since we were sophomores—no more crossing Washington Road and straggling down Prospect Avenue. Among the classmates who came back for our 14th (and marveled at the near-perfect weather all weekend) were Roy Abramowitz, Shaban Alam, Peter Angelica, Jeanne Pomar Asber, Norm Asber, Bob August, Secretary James Barron, Jack Butler, Gabriella Morris Coleman, Treasurer Doug Coppi, Dorie Kauffman Culp, Bill Farrell, Jack Flannery, Mary Flournoy, Steve Franks, John Frye, Anne Kesselman Gauthier, Bryan Gillespie, Mark Glassner, Ricki Rogers Gordon, Henry Ibarra, Aline Johnson, Sungchul Kim, V.P. Linda Knights, Eve Lesser, D. D. Lewis, Tom Magnus, Curtis McWilliams, Arthur Miller, Charles Milligan, Paula Morency, Cathy Tiedemann Morra, David Pilus, Rick Pivrotto, Bruce Quachenbush, Scott Quachenbush, Steven Resnick, Terry Ryan, Rick Schifter, Will Scott, Andrea Egiton Seaton, Ross Schmucki, Priscilla Smart Schwarzenbach, Patty Cuyler Shmitzu, Harwood Smith, Bob Tufts, Suzanne Israel Tufts, Vicki Watson, Wendy Williamson, Deborah Wong, and Kathryn Miller Zalaznick.

CATCHING UP—Will Scott married Jill Sparhawk (Dartmouth '82) in Philadelphia on Oct. 1, 1988. Princetonians in attendance included Andy Mendelsohn, Steve Sullivan, Mark Reboil, and Bob Lampton '78. Jill, the niece of longtime Princeton varsity crew coach Pete Sparhawk, and Will are mathematicians with the federal government. They're scheduled to leave this summer for a three-year posting in England. Megan Maloney Sims and her husband, Terry, became parents for the second time with the birth of a son, Owen, on Apr. 24, 1990. Owen's sister, Anne, is now 3. After a week's vacation in Palm Springs, Calif., in March, Bruce Quachenbush attended a surprise 35th birthday party for "L. A. Law" Executive Producer David E. Kelley '79. Arranged and hosted by actress Marlee Matlin, the guest list included the cast and crew of the show, as well as Princetonians from across the country. Among them: Kris Kollevoll and Mike O'Leary.

A sun-soaked P-rade! Can this be Reunions? At least 50 classmates attended for part or all of the festi-ties (a complete list of known attendees will appear in our Class newsletter, due out in August). Among the highlights:

Several new members of the '78 family enjoyed their first P-rade. Being fussed over by their moms and dads and admired by classmates were: William Hayworth, born Feb 17, 1991, to Nan (Sutter) '81 and Scott Hayworth; Allison Purcell Shyer, born Jan 24 to Marsha (Gisner) and John Shyer; Gemma Milly, born Jan. 16, to Chris and Katie (Connolly) Milly; Anna Bruestle, born last Sept. 24, to John and Cary Helme Bruestle; and Sarah McWilliams, born Sept 6, to Curtis '77 and Betty Ann Sisco McWilliams. In addition to the little ones, Rick Stauffer's new bride, Nanci Ruyle Stauffer (Nebraska '82) was experiencing her first P-rade. They were married last Dec. 29 in Atlanta, with classmates Barry Gleichenhans, Paul Fishman, Bob Ballen, Ken Levinson, Hall McKinley, and Dennis Lous enjoying the festivities. Nanci is completing a fellowship in pediatric cardiology at the Univ. of Minn., and Rick continues his work with Intel in Princeton.

If anyone in the Class needed medical attention during the weekend, they were well covered: Nancy Neuman, a professor of neuro-ophthalmology at Emory Univ., made the trek from Atlanta. John Seftor, an orthopedic surgeon specializing in spinal work, is in the process of relocating to Towson, Md. Dave Danar took a break from his duties as a medical reporter for MEDICAL TRIBUNE U.S. to enjoy our 13th.

Ken Black and Peter Weiss came all the way out from Seattle. Ken continues to work for Boeing as a flight control systems designer on the new 777.

Just as this issue went to press, we learned that David Donoho has been awarded a MacArthur Foundation fellowship. David is a professor and statistician at Stanford.

Hope you're enjoying a great summer—when you get your copy of the Class newsletter please take a moment to respond to the enclosed information requests.

Dave will be working for another television network, but still consulting to "L.A. Law." Lisa traveled the furthest, from London, for the happy occasion. Transferred there for her husband's job, Lisa is currently a full-time mother to their three-year-old and nine-month-old sons. Peter, Frank Brosens, and Kathy Giblin traveled from the East Coast. A sports marketing and public relations consultant, Kathy has been to Africa, Australia, and South America recently for the Duracell around-the-world yacht race. Bruce and Suzie, on the other hand, did not have to travel far, as they recently purchased a home in Pasadena. Bruce is a writer for CALIFORNIA magazine.

Tad and Betsy Stellman '81. Tad runs his family's heating, plumbing, and air-conditioning business in Baltimore, and Betsy practices estates and trust law part-time. Pictured (right) is Ariela Jae Yedwab, who was born in Jan. 1991 to Paul and Wendy Yedwab. A rabbi in Michigan, Paul said he hoped his daughter would come into the world to the sounds of classical music; instead, she was born to Persian Gulf news on CNN. (Thanks to all who have sent baby pictures; please be patient as we work through the unexpected backlog.)

GONE BACK: We had a beautiful weekend for our 11th, and the Class celebrated a new reunion location (Butler College, formerly New New Quad) and a new route for the P-rade (through the center of campus). Confirmed sightings of Class members enjoying the festivities included: Leslie Brooks Bennett, Dan Bennewitz, Chris Boyman, Beth Cobert, Paul Fern, Sally Frank, Bill Hawley, Amy Kopp Hopkins, Louis Ivey III, Mark Jensen, Sharon Keld, Andy Kaufman, Bruce McBarnette, Jason Meyer, Jennifer Ware Parker, Rik Parker, Arlene Pedovitch, Joe Quinn, Kim Ritzi, Len Ritz, Howie Rosen, Eddie Rosenblatt, Arthur Saylor III, Skip Smith, Ted Sotir, Bill Stevenson, Selma Thompson, Dan Wachpress, Buzz Ward, John Morgan Williams, and Cliff Wilson.

This is NOT the proposed design for our 15th Class costume being modeled for your review. It is Louis Ivey last January in Saudi Arabia, serving with a company providing surgical support for injured Marines, Saudis, and Iraqi POWs. They treated the first U.S. wounded, and cared for over 500, mostly Iraqis, just 15 miles from the Kuwait border. Louis is now back as a general surgeon at Camp Pendleton.

Also pictured, at five months, is Francis C. Lovecchio, son of attorneys Marc Lovecchio and his wife, Angela, and grandson of Francis A. Lovecchio '54. Marc and family live in Williamsport, Penn., where Angela has been on maternity leave and Marc is busy in the firm of Campana, Campana, Lovecchio. Marc still finds time to show his son the world of triathlons and to take him to the local soccer games, where Marc is a coach.

The Class of '81's tenth reunion was a tremendous success! Our attendance of over 500 registered classmates broke the record for attendance for any Princeton class in the history of Reunions. Classmates came from near and far. Dan Roock, head coach for Princeton women's crew, lives just a quarter-mile from the boathouse and had the distinction of traveling the shortest distance to Reunions. Those who came the farthest included Peter Greenbill from Honolulu, Tony Gustini from Paris, Ted Horton and Pete Mesrobian from London, Susan Varrin from Geneva, Akiho Maeda from Manila, Huseyin Akin from Istanbul, Lloyd Cbao from Hong Kong, Steve Schabtle and Frank Packard from Tokyo, and Jon Wonnell from Singapore. The classmate who has attended the most Reunions in his lifetime is, appropriately, Andy O'Hara, our reunions chairman. Both Howard Cooper and Doug Lubic have attended every reunion since graduation.

The youngest child at our reunion was Hannah Gold, the 18-day-old daughter of Jason Gold and Nina Katzander. The oldest child to attend was Suzanne Muldowney, age ten, daughter of Sally and John Muldowney. The classmate with the most children is Mike Manganaro, whose four children are Sarah (6), Michael (4), Katie (2), and John (5 mos.).

The consensus was that the only way to improve on this reunion would be if the rest of the Class had been able to make the trip. Classmates were overheard asking about Hilary Bok, Sunny Boyd, Jonathan Garza, Rudy Hinojosa, Scott Hochgraf, Fernando Iglesias, Shaye McDaniel, Howard Merton, Kirby Milton, Cecilia Pinto de Moura, Peter Loneragan, Bob Price, Mike Riesco, Alex Sanford, Ross Settles, Chris Westbrook, and the many others who were missed.

Stanford.

Howard Retter married Jody P. Ellant (U.Penn '82) in Feb. 1990. Howard and Jody now live in Woodbridge, Conn.

Welcome to our new Class officers, Nancy Zabel Eristoff, president; Steve Mayer, V.P.; Diana Hoadley, treasurer; and Carol Phebean, secretary, who can be reached at Clark & Weinstock, 341 Madison Ave.-14th floor, N.Y., NY 10017; 212-953-2550.

Only 330 days 'til our tenth reunion. Mark your calendars to join us on June 4-7. Rich Gorelick has been receiving a steady flow of ideas and volunteers to make our tenth the best. The committee heads are: Tiger Joyce—headquarters; Louise O'Brien/Maria Sanchez—food/Class dinner; Tony Santullo—pre-registration/attendance; Teri Dooley Kogut—publicity; Andy Russell—entertainment; Phil Jacobs—treasury; James and Elaine Flanagan Wistar—housing; Cindy Crowley—P-rade; Martha McCully—costumes; Tom Brotherton—deputy; Jeff Idler—satellite classes; Maddi Hausmann—Class book. We still need classmates to organize child care and alumni/faculty forums. If you want to con-

On Nov. 11, 1990 Jacques deLisle married Melinda Levine (Brown '82) in Bernardsville, N.J. Princetonians in attendance were (front row) Jacques, Melinda; (second row) Bill Bikales '76, David Bookbinder, Meryl Kessler '84, Scott Oran '83; (third row) Herb Fockler '81, Suzanne Hollander, Edie Carter '80, Arun Alagappan '81; (last row) Evan Bloom, large houseplant h'85, Bill Ryan '84, Keating Holland; (Not pictured: David Mednicoff).

Watch out for an Aug. 27, 1991, PBS broadcast of "Stop the Church," a Robert Hilferty documentary. "Stop the Church" is about ACT UP's controversial demonstration against Cardinal O'Connor at St. Patrick's Cathedral last year. The film won best documentary at the Ann Arbor film festival and has been shown internationally. Robert has also completed a feature-length script, Comes to Show, which he will direct once he finds a producer.

At least 26 members of the Class of '83 made it back to central Jersey the weekend of June 7-9 for our eighth reunion. They were, in order of sign-ins: Sev Onysbhavych, Sam Butrey, Gail Franck, Heather Trouman, Carla Armbrust Gomez, Dawn Friedman (Tried), Geoff Brown, Mark Siol, Mark Brabney, Rick Giles, Gary Knapp, Bruce Antop, Juli Robbins Greenwood, Ursula Szulczycki, Richard Simkus, Taylor Gibson, Nick Simeonides, Brad Urschel, Mark Bernstein, John Ross, Mark Sber, Bill Bandon, Judith Hunter, Charlie Parafon, Eugene and Lanni Sidoti, and Brian McDonald. It's time to start the planning for our tenth reunion. Anyone interested in participating is urged to contact Mark Brahney with ideas.

Pictured at left are Nick Simeonides and Tara Holtje who were married in Jan. 1987. Nick is an attorney with the Loews Corp., working in commercial free speech and government relations. Tara is pursuing a degree in elementary education at Queens College. They have a son, Stephen (3).

Wendy McClure Buckmaster writes that she is living in Santa Barbara where she runs a counseling psychology practice, a bodywork practice, and teaches singing workshops. She also runs singing/backpacking retreats.

Roy Yates and Theresa Campbell Yates are living in East Brunswick, N.J., with their sons Tony and Bret. Roy is an assistant professor of engineering at Rutgers.

A summer invitation is extended to all Princetonians by the Nantucket Alumni Assn. An outing at the Sankaty Beach Club is scheduled for Aug. 23. Any classmates interested in attending should contact Andy Cowherd '74 at 908-273-7266.

As we sit back a moment to reflect upon the fact that we've just finished celebrating our seventh reunion, it's somewhat comforting to note that some things never change. Seven years ago, we were celebrating graduations, new jobs, and holy matrimony. Now, more than a dog's year later, we find ourselves rejoicing in... graduations, new jobs, and holy matrimony! What follows is a brief glance at classmates engaged in the "everything old is new again" jubilee!

Tom Dragone has just become Dr. Tom Dragone. After acquiring a brand-new doctorate in materials science from Stanford, Tom embarked on a five-week backpacking trip in Alaska, before settling down at Orbital Sciences Corp., where Tom will design and build satellites and launch vehicles. Also finishing her Ph.D. is Brooks Appelbaum, who is getting her doctorate in English at Cornell. Brooks is finding time between dissertation writing to act in community theater.

In the world of medicine, Joe CioCCA and his wife, Sharon, have settled in Pittsburgh, where he is starting medical school in the fall at the Univ. of Pittsburgh. Constance Mao reports that she ran into Alex Shafir and Mark Snowden in the lunch room at Harborview Medical Center in Seattle, Wash. Connie is a third-year ob.-gyn. resident, Alex is a third-year resident in internal medicine, and Mark is a first-year resident in psychiatry.

Amy Gordon writes that she recently attended the wedding of Susannah Robins to Craig Albright. Other '84's at the celebration included Patrice McConnell Cromwell, Augusta Tilney, and Suzy Wojciechowski and George Caldwell. Also married this summer were Christopher Getch to Cathy Marie Leonard, and Jose (X. J.) Jordan to Elena Ostrowski. Hopefully, pictures and more details will follow in future issues!

COMMUNICATIVE PROPERTIES

Hal McCard married Brenda Mull in New Orleans last June. Pictured above are (l-r) David Williamson '84, Locky Nimick '83, Hal and Brenda, Bill Conley '83, and Andrew Mytelka. The McCards have set up shop in Macon, Ga., where Hal is an attorney with Anderson, Walker & Reichert. Says Hal, "The '85ers have a standing invitation to journey south for some Southern hospitality."

Jim Bilbao writes to say that he missed our fifth due to the birth of his second son Aaron Alexander ("perhaps a goalie for the Class of 2012 soccer squad.") "My older son, Nathan, is now two. My wife of three years, Rebecca, and I live in Singapore. I just sold my regional office products distributorship and now head up training for Fuji Xerox Asia Pacific. Since graduation, I've lived in five cities, in three countries, and I've worked in 24 countries." Jim hopes to get stateside so he can see The Doobs, but until then he invites visitors with the video to Singapore.

John Grabam says, "I was planning to go to our fifth reunion, but I was kidnapped for the month of June. So far, at least, it appears there is life after law school; however, getting my handicap below ten may take a while longer than I had hoped."

Finally, a nexis search of other famous Class of 1985 spring weddings reveals that Jill Robbins joined hands with John Pollock in Evanston, Ill.; Dr. Lisa Nachtigall conjoined with Robert Flaumenhaft in Kent Cliffs, N.Y.; Angela Janklow yoked Gerard Christopher Harrington in N.Y.; and Bill Ullman wed Tracy Bohrer in L.A. Happy honeymooning!

Almost half of the Class of 1986 returned for our fifth reunion, for a weekend of reminiscing and celebrating. Outgoing president Dan Renberg announced the election of the new Class officers at the Class dinner, held at the boathouse. The new Class officers are Charlie Thompson, president; Terri Sewell, V.P.; and Esther Hsieh, secretary. Todd Goretick, who has been treasurer for the past five years, will stay on to be treasurer for the next five. The Class is still looking for a volunteer to be reunions chairman and a volunteer to be Class agent. If you are interested, contact Charlie.

The Class of 1986 broke new ground by being the first Class to sponsor a service event at Reunions. Many classmates managed to rouse themselves and fight hangovers Saturday morning for four service projects, including visits to a nursing home and a hospital, a clean-up project at Lake Carnegie, and a playground clean-up and gardening project in inner-city Trenton.

The Class of 1986 owes a big round of applause for Reunions Chair Doug Bootbe, Assistant Chairman and Housing Coordinator Pai Yost, Undergraduate Secretary Andy Wollen '91, Uniform Chairman Vince McAnaney, Pre-Registration Chairman Esther Hsieh, Publicity Coordinator Jean Keamy, Off-year Registration and Class Book Chairman Diana Peyton Kollevol, Entertainment Chairman Jeff Joseph, Headquarters Chairman Jim Petrucci, and Food Chairmen Ed Miller and Burke Doar.

As of Friday of Reunions, the Class was just short of its goal of 60% Class participation in Annual Giving. Although Class Agent Ed Zschau was not able to attend Reunions (he was taking and studying for finals at Stanford B-School), his spirit and photograph were present. If you have not sent in a check to Princeton yet, JUST DO IT!

MARY TAYLOR DENKO

The Class had a very good turnout for the fourth reunion. Nearly 150 people showed up for the big event.

On Friday night, Bruce Latta and Ned Sparrow kept the fifth reunion's stage lively with their band, Nickel-town. Bruce will soon head to Hong Kong to teach math at the International School. Ned is writing his first novel; he and wife, Melissa '86, live in Baltimore.

Rick and Laura Hayes Holgate are in Boston, where Rick is wrapping up Ph.D. studies at M.I.T. Laura works for Harvard's Kennedy School. Also in Boston, Karen Berger studies molecular biology at Tufts.

Tom Stanley married Christine Catulle (U.Va. '87) in Apr. 1990. They live in N.J. David Witzel and wife, Tricia, returned from Morocco, having finished their work for the Peace Corps. They live in N.Y.C., where Dave is a paralegal.

Just graduated from law school, Mehrdad Baghat spoke at his commencement at Harvard. Nancy Taggart (U.Va. law) plans to study for the bar over the summer, then start work in a Boston firm in October. Entering N.Y.U. in September, Luis Torres has been a history teacher in Brooklyn.

Mike DeBerry works for an H.M.O. in South Carolina. Living and working in Princeton, David Jack- son will head to Yale business school in the fall. Matt Gantz has returned from the Persian Gulf and will attend Harvard B-School next year. The Class applauds Derek Easton and Carl Groggin, who have volunteered to be fifth-reunion housing officer and treasurer, respectively. Please write if you are also interested in lending a hand.

This column was written by Class V.P. Bill Bowman, who lives in Chicago:

REUNIONS: Over 150 classmates made it back for Reunions this year. It's hard to believe that we are only two years from the fifth. More information will follow about how to participate in planning the fifth.

REGIONAL V.P.s: Among my many roles as Class V.P. is the coordination of a network of regional Class V.P.s. Regional V.P.s organize events, fundraising, and schools committee work, often through the local Princeton alumni association. Our Class has had excellent representation in a number of cities, but now many classmates are relocating due to job changes or the start or completion of graduate school. This summer, as part of our effort to build momentum for the fifth reunion, the Class officers will be looking for new regional V.P.s in many cities. Please contact me (312-248-9388) if you are interested or want to receive more information.

NEWS FROM THE WINDY CITY: David Rose and I coach a Little League baseball team in the Cabrini Green public housing projects. Big Dave works for ESPN. After spending time traveling in China and pursuing post-graduate studies in England, Tom McNeill has returned to his native Chicago and has taken a position with an independent producer of documentaries.

OTHER NEWS: Pepsi has transferred Jon Evans from Seattle to Hawaii. It's hard to feel sorry for Jon, but I have sympathy for the Princeton Club of Western Washington, which lost a very active young alumni chairman. San Francisco Young Alumni Chair Kathy Roberts faced off against Peggy Moss (Washington, D.C.) and Katherine Savage (Connecticut) as part of the National Women's Club Lacrosse Tournament in Philadelphia. Struggling U.C.L.A. law student Chuck Fontana is busy writing "bad poetry" and has turned to his own vegetable garden for sustenance. His latest favorite: sunflowers.

89 DAVID MILLER
255 Ewing St.
Princeton, NJ 08540

WISH YOU WERE THERE: The Class of '89 returned 311 members to Reunions June 7-8, which compares very favorably with last year's second-year reunion total of about 203. That figure includes only registered participants; many people just came for the P-rade on Saturday afternoon. The new P-rade route worked out well for our Class. Some folks still longed for the chance to march down Prospect Ave.; on the other hand, the new route allowed our Class to see the full spectacle of the march, floats and all, as it came down Elm Drive.

A PAT ON 480 BACKS: The day before, Class officers attended the Alumni Council luncheon to pick up our award for best young alumni class and two other awards for last year's reunions attendance of 480. While it is fairly routine for the first-year reunion have the highest turnout among off-year classes, our attendance rate of 41.5 percent of the Class was anything but routine: you have to go back to the 1940s to match that level of support.

Our first "major" reunion ain't too far away. Mindful of that, the Class has decided to mark the halfway point with a two-and-a-halfth reunion next January. Watch out for more info about a regional mini-reunion near you.

The Class sold 60 or so P'89 sweatshirts at Reunions, but there are still some available in XL. If you want one, send a check for $28 plus $4 shipping (made out to the Class of '89) to David Miller at the above address.

As Class secretary, I get lots of mail. With apologies to all of you who sent news and haven't seen it in print until today, here is our first annual "Damn, I forgot to include that" column:

EVERYONE'S GETTIN' HITCHED: Sean Dorward married Susan Jones (Smith '90) in Washington, D.C., in May. Pictured are Drew Denker, Paul Haabr, Susan, Sean, Paul Briant and Kathy Shultzze. In addition, Steve Baughman and Katie Wray will marry this summer. Steve studies law at Harvard, while Katie teaches history and biology at the Purnell School in N.J. Stephanie Tomlin and Matt Marquardt also will marry in August. They study law at Emory and the Univ. of Florida, respectively. Last but not least, David Hamermesh will wed Amy Samuels (Delaware '90) in December. They met at Michigan, where David studies archaeology.

Before moving to San Francisco, Sue Finney played indoor field hockey for a club team in N.J., where she also coached girls' basketball.

Mike Manning and Dave Jefferts work for Habitat for Humanity in Savannah, Ga., "living large" on $20 a week.

David Emmert works with insane and suicidal children in a psychiatric hospital in N.J.

Peter Catanzaro and Allison Selwood live in Minnesota, where Pete studies law at the Univ. of Minn. and Allison works at an adult daycare center with stroke victims and people who suffer from Alzheimer's and Parkinson's disease.

Sara Sayeed is with Prep for Prep, an education group geared toward minority students from economically disenfranchised families.

Eric Tilenius works for a software company in California and has been elected V.P. of the Calif. Space Development Council, a grassroots group promoting the exploration and settlement of space.

Jeffrey Powell has left the electrical engineering program at Stanford to consult for the San Diego Zoo.

Mary Parks works at a sports medicine clinic in D.C. that's affiliated with the Bullets and the Capitals. She'll attend law school in the fall.

Ed Hochenbury practiced with the California Angels in spring training in Mesa, Ariz. before being released.

Erik Hodgetts works for an architecture firm in San Francisco, where he lives with Cliff Harlan, Stephanie Rosenbaum, and Chian Chien. He attended a very Princeton New Year's Eve bash in NYC with Elizabeth Acherman, Sandi Burkett, Mark Johnson, Bill McCartney, Rob Maxwell, and Bill Quigley. Spencer Lin and Maria Maruca both work for Proctor & Gamble in Cincinnati.

Reunions weather was almost perfect, and graduate alumni shone to advantage as three "A.P.G.A. symposiums" were held on the main campus—a first joining Princeton faculty in these sessions were Manfred F. Boemake '84 (German Hist. Inst.) and Walter M. Licht '77 (U.Penn.) on Woodrow Wilson; James Turner Johnson '68 (Rutgers) on justice and conflict in a multicultural world; and George Garrett '85 (U.Va.), Jonathan Brown '64 (N.Y.U.), and George J. Bornstein '66 (U.Mich.) on the arts as joy and social conscience. This last one attracted over 80 eager auditors; all thoroughly enjoyed the presentations. Gradualums were also evident among the faculty forums and other events; Nathan A. Randall '81 spoke engagingly on the renovation and reinstallation of the chapel organ.

The traditional P-rade provided another A.P.G.A. success: Our gown and, especially, mortarboard with oversize tigertail tassel met with much appreciative comment. Unless creatively curled atop the mortarboard, the tigertail tassel needs support from the hand, presenting a posture that suggests speaking into a phone receiver. Some on the sidelines playfully asked, "Who's on the line?" Said I, "It's Annual Giving—I can't hang up!"

After various receptions, including that of Dean Theodore and Yetta Ziolkowski, 105 of us attended dinner in Procter Hall. President Harold T. Shapiro '64 commended A.P.G.A.'s effort to recognize and reward excellence in teaching and urged all to keep faith and act in a way that inspires trust and helps others understand what we have accomplished in higher education in the last decades. The assembly sang "Happy Birthday" to Harold, and A.P.G.A. President Patricia Marks '72 led all in honoring six professors who have contributed remarkably to Princeton's excellence in teaching: A. Cemal Eringen (civil engineering and operations research), John Lewis (economics and international affairs), Arthur Link (American history), Donald S. McClure (chemistry), Joseph M. Notterman (psychology), and Steve M. Slaby (civil engineering and operations research). Reunions Chair Diana Velez '77 presented packets of student letters to each as sample tributes were read aloud.

Balancing these six professors were six young scholars whose work as Princeton's newest teachers has continued the tradition: Amy Pumiko Ogata and Paul Raymond Provost received special service awards for ably continuing Robert Clark's Modern Architecture course after his heart attack. This year's coveted awards for excellence in teaching went to Teresa Claire Boucher (romance languages and literatures), Ann Marie Carosella (psychology), Arie Marcelo Kacowicz (politics), and Michael John Stucky (mechanical and aerospace engineering).

Presenting these awards, Dean Ziolkowski noted how Procter Hall itself reinforced the evening's honors: the chief stained glass window proclaims from the Old Testament Book of Daniel, "Those who educate many others to righteousness are like the stars unto all eternity." Below it, an inscription from the New Testament (Matthew) reads, "Don't call yourselves masters, because you have only one master, Jesus Christ." The dean put his own twist on that to mean, "Just because you got your M.A.s or Ph.D.s . . . remember there's someone out there just a bit better than you are."

Newly elected A.P.G.A. officers are Janice Stultz Roddenberry '77 (romance languages and literatures), president; Arnold Brooks '56 (mechanical and aerospace engineering), V.P.; and Everett Garretson '51 (electrical engineering), treasurer. Also elected to the board are Mario Pelusi '82 (music) and George Beetle '66 (W.W.S.); new as a student on the board is Kimberly Jones. Thanks are due to Diana Velez for a well-run and inspiring reunion; we had a real presence. Thanks also to assistant Judy Faller '89 for helping assure our success.

Over the years, one can take satisfaction in seeing the merging of the old and the new, of beginnings and endings. T.S. Eliot touches one aspect of this in EAST COKER: "In my end is my beginning." Another may be seen in Italo Calvino's INVISIBLE CITIES, where the cities Marco Polo visits seem to take on aspects of each other over time. This merging of beginnings and endings, of the old and the new, is a characteristic of the academic year, and is central to Reunions, especially as the P-rade ends with the graduating class "commencing" their own larger lives. I now end eight years with this column. It was an honor to follow Marvin Chelien '65hc '71; I wish the best to my successor and new beginnings to all.

George W. Kassler '14

GEORGE DIED May 4, 1991, at his home at the Palisades, Calif. Prior to his death he served as secretary of the Class of 1914.

After graduation, he received his M.B.A. from Harvard, then enlisted in the Army and was an officer in the 341st Field Artillery. After the war, George spent most of his business career in investment banking and was president of the Investment Statisticians of Los Angeles. Since 1942, he has been on the staff of the engineering department of Douglas Aircraft Co. at Santa Monica, Calif.

George is survived by his widow, Helen; his daughter, Claire; his son, Kenneth; 13 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren, to all of whom the Class of 1914 extends its sincere and deepest sympathy.

Thomas VanOrden Urmy '21

THE CLASS LOST one of its distinguished physicians when Thomas VanOrden Jr., M.D., died Apr. 22, 1991, at the age of 91.

A native of N.J., Tom prepped at Barringer High School in Newark. At Princeton, he was a member of Whig Hall and Terrace Club. His medical career culminated in 20 years as director of Health at Williams College, followed by his becoming medical director at Sprague Electric Co.

He had served as president of the American College Health Assn. and was a member of the A.M.A., the Massachusetts Medical Society, the American College of Physicians, and the American Society of Internal Medicine.

He is survived by his widow, Betty; two sons, Thomas V. Jr. and Norman B.; and six grandchildren. The Class extends sincere sympathy to them all.

Rudolph Kirk '22 '32

RUDOLPH KIRK died of heart failure in San Marcos, Tex., Nov. 7, 1989, at age 91.

Rudolph prepared for Princeton at Sidwell Friends School in Washington, D.C. At Princeton he was active in Theater Intime. After graduating with honors, he went on to a master's in English at the Univ. of Iowa, before returning to Princeton as a Scribner fellow in 1927. He received both a master's and doctorate in English from Princeton, and taught at Rutgers for most of his career. He served as chairman of the English dept. there from 1960 to 1963. In 1963, he retired and moved to Texas as a visiting distinguished professor of English at Southwest Texas State Univ.

As a scholar, author, and editor, Rudolph focused on the works of American writer William Dean Howells and frequently collaborated with his wife, Clara, whom he married in 1930. He was the first editor of the JOURNAL OF RUTGERS UNIVERSITY LIBRARY, was co-founder of the English Inst. at Columbia Univ., and was a Fulbright scholar at the Univ. of Liege in Belgium. He was an active Episcopalian, serving on the vestry of St. John the Evangelist Church in New Brunswick, N.J. and as a member of St. Mark's Episcopal Church in San Marcos.

Rudolph married Clara Marburg in 1930; she died in 1976. He is survived by his daughter, Susanne, and son, Donald '59, and grandson, James P. The Class extends its deepest sympathy to Rudolph's family.

Patrick Carlisle Beattie '23

WE LOST OUR very special classmate and loyal Tiger when Pat died Nov. 1, 1990. He lived at Catskill, N.Y. Pat was born in Arlington, N.J., Dec. 16, 1900. He prepared for Princeton at the Newman School, Lakewood, N.J., where he was on both the football and hockey teams. On the Princeton campus he continued active as a member of the football squad. He belonged to the Catholic Club and Whig Hall, and served as the treasurer of Campus Club.

In our Class Nassau Herald, Pat states that he planned to become a banker, but he must have changed plans, for he had an impressive career with B. Altman and Co. in N.Y. as chief buyer for the retail departments. He did our Class a great favor by having Altman's produce our Class tie, never less than one gross per order. No wonder 1923 always had a few ties to give to entering sons of '23 and also to varsity football players. Charlie Caldwell had a 1923 tie. Always a responsible citizen, Pat served his country with distinction in WWII as a battery commander, Coast Artillery, at Ft. Getty, R.I. He was later ordered to Fort Meade, Md. His last duty was at Camp Adair, Oreg.

Pat lost his wife, Mary Deane, in 1979. The Class of 1923 is proud of Pat and fully appreciated his many services to the Class.

Cyril Farney '23

OUR CYRIL, who was born in Petrograd in Old Russia June 3, 1903, left us Sept. 26, 1990. His life was brilliantly successful; our Class is proud to claim him.

Cyril's early years were spent in Cincinnati, Oh. The son of George Farney and Sylvia Wurlitzer, he prepared for college at Horace Mann and Morristown School. At Princeton, he was a member of the University Orchestra and Clio Hall. He lived at Craftsman Farms in Morris Plains.

After graduation, Cyril began his career as V.P. and manager of the Piano Division of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. in DeKalb, Ill. He married Phyllis Holt Oct. 27, 1928. The had three sons, and one daughter, Evelyn, who died in 1958. The family had a farm nearby DeKalb, and were kept busy with horses, chickens, and pigs.

Cyril's lifetime interests included gardening, travel, sailing, skiing, and art. He won lasting fame as a photographer, using a cibachrome process which gave his prints the illusion of three dimensions. His book A FORTY-FOUR YEAR PURSUIT OF COLOR PHOTOGRAPHY captured his travels far and wide. It was dedicated to the Princeton Univ. Museum.

For the Feb. 22, 1982, RAW, Cyril wrote, "I lost my wife after 46 happy years." Cyril later married Adrienne Miloy, a widow who was his wife's closest childhood friend. She now lives at 107 Tomahawk Trail, San Antonio, TX 78232. With his widow, his three sons, Michael, Christopher, and David, and his eight grandchildren, the Class of 1923 shares both a great loss, and a sense of great pride in Cyril's life.

Victor Wesley Logan '23

THE CLASS OF 1923 lost another distinguished member when Vic died Nov. 26, 1990, at Hilton Head, S.C., where he had been living since his retirement from the faculty of the Univ. of Rochester. Victor was born Aug. 24, 1901, in Bethany, Ill. He had also lived in Florida, Georgia, and China, where his father was a medical missionary connected with the Presbyterian Hospital, Changteh, Hunan, China. Victor prepared for Princeton at Clearwater High School in Florida and China Inland Mission Boys School, Chefoo, China, where he was valedictorian of his Class. On our campus he won general honors every year, played soccer, belonged to Life Saving, Polity, Medical, Whig, and Gateway Clubs. He graduated Phi Beta Kappa. Victor earned his M.D. at Cornell Medical College in 1927 and served as an intern at the N.Y. Hospital, and also served the Roosevelt Hospital. He became an instructor in clinical medicine at Genesee Hospital. In 1972 he was honored with the title of master of the American College of Physicians. He was a captain in the U.S. Navy in WWII, 1942-46.

In 1928 Martha Skinner became his bride for 53 years, before her death in 1981. There are two daughters: Polly (Mrs. Peter Taussig) and Martha (Mrs. Milton Bicknell) and three sons, Van Norden, Joseph, and Jonathan. A brother, Tracy, is a member of the Class of 1929. There are 20 grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren in the Logan family.

Victor's classmates share both in the loss of a distinguished graduate of Princeton and pride in a brilliantly successful life.

The Class of 1923

Edward Francis D'Arms '25 *36

IN THE DEATH OF Chet D'Arms Mar. 3, 1991, the Class has lost another distinguished and respected member. He came to us from Mercersburg and was active in the Press Club, Polity Club, Philadelphian Society, Whig Hall, and was a member of Cloister Inn.

He graduated with high honors in classics, was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, and won a Rhodes Scholarship. After obtaining his bachelor's and master's degrees at Oriel College and his doctorate at Princeton, he taught classics at Vassar, the universities of Minnesota and Colorado, and Princeton. He served as a major in WWII in France and Germany (Bronze Star), and after the war was chief of education and religious policy in the civil affairs division of the Army. From 1947 to 1957 he was assistant director of humanities in the Ford Foundation, moving to a similar position at the Rockefeller Foundation, from which he retired as program director in 1969.

His wife, the former Christine Cory, died in 1987. He is survived by three sons: John '56, Edward Jr., and Philip, and four grandchildren.

The Class of 1925

H. Chandler Forman '26

CHANDLER FORMAN, noted for his architectural research and writings on early America, died Mar. 18, 1991, at his home in Easton, Md.

Chandler earned an M.A. in architecture and a Ph.D. in fine arts at U.Penn. Chandler's distinguished career began in the early 1930s with pioneering discoveries on early American settlements at Jamestown, Va., and St. Mary's City, Md. He served as chief architect of the U.S. Natl. Park Service Jamestown Archaeological Project and was the author of 14 books primarily on 17th, 18th, and early 19th-century homes. Chandler headed the art dept. of Agnes Scott College, 1947-53. Summering at Nantucket, Chandler wrote on Nantucket's unusual whale houses. He later reconstructed a 1670 home in Easton, and donated it, with his collections, as an educational museum.

Chandler served three times as president of the Eastern Shore Princeton Alumni Assn. In 1974, he received the Class of 1926 Achievement Award.

We extend our deep sympathy to his widow, Rebecca, to a daughter and son of a prior marriage, Elizabeth and Richard, and to eight grandchildren.

The Class of 1926

DeWitt Hendee Smith '26

DEWITT SMITH, SCHOLAR-ATHLETE and distinguished physician, died Mar. 4, 1991, at Corvallis, Ore. A junior Phi Beta, DeWitt rowed on the crew and was a well-known member of '26. A Rhodes scholar, DeWitt studied at Balliol College, where he took first honors. He took his medical degree at Columbia P. & S., again taking honors. During WWII, he was with the 27th Division, participating in the battles of Saigon and Okinawa.

Postwar, DeWitt and his bride of 1935, the former Mary Campbell Smith, moved to Princeton, where DeWitt was co-founder of the Princeton Medical Group. Life was abruptly changed, however, when DeWitt suffered a stroke which left him partially paralyzed. In 1969 they moved to Hawaii, where DeWitt was an outstanding physician, practicing from a wheelchair. The year 1986 saw them in Corvallis next to a daughter, Carly Davis. In addition to Mary and Carly, DeWitt is survived by daughters Audrey Reed, Susan Newton, and Nacky Eads, and a son, Blake, by 13 grandchildren and several great-grandchildren, to all of whom we extend our profound sympathy. DeWitt was an outgoing, courageous person who will be long remembered by his classmates.

Charles Lewis Henricks Jr. '27

CHUCK DIED Mar. 10, 1991, after a brief illness, in his long-time retirement home, the Canary Islands. His widow, Pat, reports that he was in the hospital only five days, "suffering little pain." He had hoped to add one more to his unbroken series of reunions in June. That record was one of several distinctions, beginning with descent from an early Dutch settler of "New Netherland," now N.Y. State. Another was his masterly administration as president of Charles Henricks, Inc., the family typesetting firm which was a mainstay of many publishing houses. Its business, as Starkey-Henricks, he increased fivefold, on historic Canal Street in N.Y.C.

Chuck led a very full life apart from business, as a member of many clubs, as office-holder in Huntington, N.Y., a staunch supporter of the Reformed Dutch and Presbyterian churches, and as a member of Princeton alumni groups, especially as an interviewer for prospective students. One wonders how he found the time for golf, bowling, tennis, and baseball. Reporting for the Sixtieth Year Record Book, he described his retired lifestyle as "an extended holiday with traveling, golf, bowling, and partying at the slightest injunction." One suspects that Chuck never had to be enjoined.

We sympathize with his widow, Patience; his sons, Charles Van Dimmers Henricks (Purdue 1958) and Robert Lewis Henricks '71; and his grandchildren, Christopher and Jennifer.

Karl Gustav Pearson '27

KARL DIED Mar. 6, 1991. His background was unusual for a Princeton undergraduate of the 1920s, when the campus was Eastern and Anglo. He was born in the Swedish community of Lindsborg, Kansas. His father became a professor at the Swedish Lutheran Upsala College, in East Orange, N.J., where Karl became a trustee.

Karl was a brilliant scholar (Phi Beta Kappa), writer, and debater, a leader in Clio Hall, prominent on the Speakers Council and the Intercollegiate Debating Team—following a career as editor of high school newspapers in Kansas and Washington, D.C.

Karl aspired to be a lawyer or teacher, and in later years taught at the Univ. of Michigan Graduate School of Business Administration. Meantime, industry claimed his eminent business talents, and he devoted many years to Akron's Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. in marketing and research, and was elected associate director. He always cherished the study of law, and earned the degree of doctor of jurisprudence from the Univ. of Michigan.

During WWII Karl served on the Army/Navy Munitions Board in Washington, D.C., and (with a Naval commission) as chief, textiles section, Office of Production and Material. He rose to the rank of lt. commander and graduated into the reserve. Never one for all work and no fun, Karl relished golf and tennis.

Thomas B. Wanamaker Jr. '27

TOM DIED Feb. 23, 1991. He came to Princeton from Ardmore, Penn. and Haverford School, and left the campus in June 1924. He led a roving life: on the Main Line outside of Philadelphia; in Pasadena, Calif.; in Hawaii; Darlen, Conn.; a retirement community in Florida; and finally in Ridgefield, Conn.

George Denniston describes Tom as quiet and reserved—and his half-brother Archibald G. Thomson agrees. He had a deep interest in the theater and in music. A contrasting devotion was to outdoor life, and he enjoyed running his Deep Well Ranch in Palm Springs, Calif., and raising Irish wolf hounds in Pasadena. He was intensely interested in tennis, and attended the big tournaments near his residence in Florida.

Always ready for adventure, Tom took WWII in stride, enlisted in the U.S. Naval Reserve, and made himself useful as a storekeeper in the South Pacific area, which, as other 1927ers know well, was anything but pacific. He was released from the service Jan. 26, 1946, with the rating of Sk 2/c.

Tom, obviously a modest fellow, reported briefly for the Class TWENTY YEAR RECORD, but not for our later biographical volumes. One suspects that the reticence veils what must have been one of 1927's most adventurous and colorful lives. The Class renders thanks for information given by Tom's sister-in-law (Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker) and by his half-brother, Archibald G. Thomson.

Walter Bothwell George '28

WALT GEORGE died Apr. 4, 1991, at the Mount Holly Nursing Center in Lumberton, near the Leisuretown section of Vincentown, N.J., where he lived in retirement.

Walt was born in Princeton, and graduated from Princeton H.S.

At college he majored in economics, and was a member of Gateway Club. After graduation he studied at the N.Y.U. Graduate School of Business Administration, and went to work with the Natl. City Bank of N.Y., now known as Citicorp. He stayed with this bank throughout his career, living in Englewood, N.J. He retired in 1966 as a branch manager after 39 years of service. He was active in the Community Chest of Englewood. He was a busy gardener all his life, and was also interested in nature study and stamp collecting. Swimming and bridge were his other favorite leisure-time pursuits.

Walt married Ruth Watson Sept. 23, 1939. She survives him, as do a daughter, Elizabeth Ohnegian, a son, Robert W., and six grandchildren. His classmates appreciated Walt's friendship, and extend their sympathy to Ruth and their family.

Howard Kinsley Hamm '28

HOWARD HAMM died Sept. 23, 1988, at home in Kalamazoo, Mich., after three years of serious illness. He graduated from Hyde Park H.S. in Chicago. At Princeton he majored in economics, took part in wrestling, and expressed his musical talents by activity in the orchestra and band.

After graduation he spent several years in the paint business in St. Paul, Minn. In 1933 he became affiliated with Benjamin Moore & Co., paint manufacturers. In 1939 he purchased a firm, A. L. Lakey & Co., that had been in business in Kalamazoo since 1874. He was a resident and businessman in Kalamazoo for 49 years.

Howard was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, the Kalamazoo Country Club, the U.S. Power Squadron, and was a commodore of the Macatawa Yacht Club in nearby Holland. He was active in the Kalamazoo Symphony Orchestra Society. He was an accomplished pianist and musician. He was interested in natural history, and often hiked through the woods in search of record-size trees. He was also an avid bird-watcher.

Howard married Eleanor How in 1937. She died in 1985. Their sons are Howard K. Jr., '63, Robert, and Warren, and there are three grandchildren. The sympathy of the Class is extended to Howard's sons and their families.

The Class of 1928

Samuel Burton Payne '28

SAM PAYNE DIED May 5, 1991, at the Franklin Medical Center in Greenfield, Mass., his native town. He graduated from Greenfield H.S. At Princeton, he majored in economics and was a member of Terrace Club.

After college Sam worked with the Guaranty Co. of N.Y., Blyth & Co., and J. P. Morgan & Co., before going with Morgan Stanley in 1944. He became a partner in 1947, and was named president of Morgan Stanley when it became incorporated in 1970. After retirement in 1972, he remained as an advisory director.

Sam's expertise in corporate finance and management was recognized by a leave-of-absence assignment in reorganizing J. I. Case & Co., and, after retirement, in working with the U. S. Railway Assn.

Sam was a trustee of the Boys' Club of N.Y., and of the Unitarian Church of All Souls.

Sam was married to Jeannette Hooker May 8, 1937. She died in 1977. Their children were Samuel Jr., John, Herbert '68, and Caroline Kotonias-Payne. There are eight grandchildren. Sam married Dee G. Appley Jan. 31, 1980. In 1942, he purchased a farm in Shelburne, Mass., and in retirement was engaged in tree farming and raising Angus cattle.

Sam was a leader in Princeton alumni affairs. He was treasurer, V.P., president, and chairman of Annual Giving of the Class of 1928. His classmates had tremendous respect and affection for Sam, because of his integrity, his willing service in many capacities, and his genuine friendship. Their sympathy is with Dee Appley and his children and their families.

Edward Randolph Welles '28

ED WELLES died quietly during an afternoon nap Apr. 15, 1991, at his home in Kansas City. In 1950 he became the Episcopal bishop of West Missouri. Before retiring in 1972, he had led the diocese to more than double its number of communicants, and 12 new congregations had been established. At the same time he had become known as a leader in ecumenical cooperation, in overcoming racial discrimination in the city, and in pioneering in the ordination of women to the ministry in the Episcopal Church.

We who at college were used to seeing Ed out in front of the distance races in track and cross-country are not surprised. Ed went to Kent School. At Princeton, in addition to being a runner, he was active in the Philadelphia Society, majored in English, and was a member of Arbor Inn.

Ed combined his graduate work and preparation for the ministry at Oxford, England, and at General Theological Seminary in N.Y. He served as pastor in Woodbridge, N.J., as chaplain at St. Mark's School in Southborough, Mass., as dean of All Saints Cathedral in Albany, N.Y., as pastor in Alexandria, Va. (where F.D.R. and Winston Churchill once attended a service, sitting together in the George Washington pew), and as dean of St. Paul's Cathedral in Buffalo, N.Y.

Ed married Catharine Van Alstyne June 2, 1931. After her death in 1963, he was married to Martha Borland for only a few months in 1984 before she died. He then married Ferne Malcolm Nov. 24, 1984. She survives him, as do four children, Rev. Katrina Swanson, Harriet Foresman, Edward III, and Peter. Ed's classmates will miss one who was a champion, as a miler, as a minister, and as a man.

John McIntyre Hadsall '29 *30

JAY DIED Feb. 8, 1991. He had prepared for college at Univ. of Chicago High School. At Princeton he roomed with his brother Stew, our deceased classmate.

Jay got a C.E. degree from Princeton in 1930 and an LL.B. from Chicago Kent College of Law in 1936.

He started work with an architectural firm in N.Y., but in 1931 joined Leonard Construction Co., of which his father was president. Then he was with Draper & Kramer, real estate, but in 1941 went with the Link Belt Co., where he stayed until retirement in 1965 to give his time to public service and family investments. He was president of the Glencoe Community Chest and of the Rotary Club and served on the boards of Association House of Chicago, Child & Family Service, and Recording for the Blind. He was extremely active with the Princeton Schools Committee.

In 1943 he married Evelyn Swift, and she survives, together with their son, Ronald Stewart Hadsall, and daughter Lucy (Mrs. Thomas Hedrick). The Class extends sincere sympathy to Jay's family.

Albin Pilkington Crutchfield '30

AL DIED AT HIS HOME in Deland, Fla., Mar. 12, 1991. A native of Sewickley, Penn., Al left Princeton after junior year but continued to study at the Univ. of Pittsburgh and Duff's Iron City College while working in the sales department of American Fruit Growers Inc. Citrus fruit became his career field and his experiences and areas of interest and effort were many and varied. Al and his brother Robert '32 had a brief partnership growing oranges in Texas (halted by bad freezes) but Florida is where Al made a large contribution to the citrus industry culminating in a nine-year tenure on the Florida Citrus Commission from 1972 to 1981. Al was an active Rotarian from 1934 to 1989 and he gave very freely of his time in many capacities for his church, his community, and on the civic organizations.

In 1935 he married Mary Elizabeth Riske, who survives. Other survivors are: a daughter, Anne McDowell; two sons, Albin Jr. and Sheldon; three sisters, Harriet Orndorff, Alice Wadsworth, and Margaret Roy; his brother, Robert; eleven grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. We deeply sympathize with the family in the loss of this fine man.

John Marshall Gorman '30

JACK DIED Apr. 17, 1991, in Millard Fillmore Hospital after a long illness. "John Marshall," as he was known among lawyers in his hometown of Buffalo, N.Y., moved smoothly through his school years from Nichols School to Princeton to Harvard Law, and became an attorney with a general practice like his father before him. A member of Dial Lodge, he roomed two years with Hank Pennypacker and years three and four with Hobie Brinsmade. Jack will be remembered as a conservationist; as an avid sportsman and outdoorsman with skills in figure skating, fishing, and sailing; and as a commodore of the North Shore Yacht Club on Bertie Bay in Ontario. During the war he had an unusual assignment as an airplane engine test operator in a Chevrolet plant. Jack and Mary Hollister were married from 1932 until Mary died in 1987. They had three daughters. Jack's second wife, Esther W. Winfield, survives, as do his daughters; Ruth G. Dorries, Marjory G. Stoller, and Sally G. Burns; and ten grandchildren. We extend to them our sincere sympathy in their loss.

Elbridge Keith '30

ELBRIDGE DIED Jan. 31, 1991, after a brief stay at Old Orchard Manor in Skokie, Ill. His home was at 711 Oak Street in Winnetka, Ill. Elb came to Princeton via Lawrenceville School and left after freshman year to attend Northwestern Univ. of Commerce. His career was in banking specializing in trust income tax work. He spent many years with the First Natl. Bank of Chicago, from which he retired at the age of 60. In his retirement years he was active at the North Shore Senior Center, the Winnetka Congregational Church, and was a president, treasurer, and founding member of the Chicago Curling Club. He and his wife, Virginia, were fond of traveling and did so frequently, often to far places like the Far East and remote parts of Africa. Elb is survived by his widow; two daughters, Marjorie Carhart and Jane Armstrong; his son, Elbridge Gerry Keith; two sisters, Margaret Holloman and Harriet Keith; two brothers, Harold and Thomas; nine grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. To all of them we extend our sincere sympathy.

The Class of 1930

Herbert Rush Preston Jr. '30

HERB DIED of cancer Apr. 25, 1991, at his home in Roland Park in Baltimore, where he lived for many years. He was one of nearly 30 members of our Class who prepared at Gilman Country School.

He was a member of Quadrangle Club and roomed with Jack Strawbridge. Herb majored in history at Princeton and maintained a lifelong interest in the subject, with emphasis on the Civil War and the State of Maryland in the 18th and 19th centuries. He joined U.S.F. & G. Insurance soon after graduation and stayed with them at the home office in Baltimore until he retired in 1972 as executive V.P. in charge of casualty operations. The war years, however, provided a change of scene, and he said later that after three years as a master sergeant he had learned many things not taught at Princeton. In 1950 Herb married Amlanta Suco, who died in 1980. There were no children. He had two relatives on his mother's side who attended Princeton in the 19th century: A. B. Cross, Class of 1830, and J. M. Cross, 1867. Herb is survived by his second wife, Elizabeth Ogden Cooper, whom he married in 1981; two step-daughters, Ann Cooper and Jane Cooper Otley; and a sister, Janet Cross Preston. To them we extend our sincere sympathy.

Gibbs L. Baker '31

KNOWN IN COLLEGE by his first name to distinguish him from Bill Baker, known affectionately by all as "Little Bake," Gibbs died in Sarasota, Feb. 26, 1991. After college he went, as did many of our Class, to Harvard Law School. He lived for a time in Washington, D.C., where he was with the State Dept. After serving in the Navy, Gibbs set up his own law office and then moved to Siesta Key, near Sarasota. He was a trustee or director of several foundations and served as '31 representative while in Washington. To his widow, Sheila, and their family, we extend our sympathy.

The Class of 1931

Frederick William Brobyn '31

FREDERICK BROBYN DIED Mar. 25, 1991. He prepared at the Northeast High School in Philadelphia and the Hun School. He was interested in sports and travel. He worked at Girard College and the Department of Public Assistance in Philadelphia. Most of his business career was with the Social Security Administration. He was a steadfast member of the monthly Philadelphia 1931 luncheon group that met for many years at the old Princeton Club. To his widow, Carolyn, and his family, the Class extends its sympathy.

Philip Burnham '31

ALTHOUGH WE HAVEN'T HEARD from Phil for a long time, he had a distinguished career mostly in editing and writing of which the Class can be proud. Moving from N.Y. to San Francisco to Tucson, Phil died Apr. 6, 1991. At college, he was chairman of the Tiger and a writer for the PRINCE. Shortly after graduation, Phil became associated with the well-known Catholic journal COMMONWEAL and soon became the editor-in-chief. During WWII, he served as an Army Air Force officer attached to the Office of Strategic Services. To his widow and their family, the Class extends its sympathy.

John W. Clingerman '31

JOHN W. CLINGERMAN DIED Aug. 4, 1990. He was a lifelong resident of the Pittsburgh area and a graduate of Shady-side Academy. As a freshman, Johnny was the stroke of the Princeton Olympic trials crew which came very close to winning first place and representing the U.S.A. in 1928. Johnny worked first for the U. S. Steel Co. and then as manager at Levinson Steel. He roomed all four years with John K. Foster, who, with George Lockhart, attended his memorial service. Johnny was an elder in the Beverly Heights United Presbyterian Church and active in the Cerebral Palsy Association. He was a member of the Cap and Gown Club. An always-cheerful friend, Johnny will be missed by his classmates. To his widow, Sally, and his children and grandchildren, we convey our condolences.

Duncan C. Dobson '31

FORMER PRESIDENT of the Ludlow-Saylor Wire Cloth Co. in St. Louis, our classmate Dunc died May 13, 1991, at his retirement home in Vero Beach. At college he was manager of freshman soccer and a member of the gym team. A longtime resident of St. Louis, Dunc served on the boards of the Mercantile Bank, the St. Louis Hospital, and the Munny Opera. Classmates attending a Florida winter reunion remember with pleasure the Sunday brunch at the Dobson home. Dunc is survived by his widow, Mettie; a son, Duncan C. Dobson Jr.; and a daughter, Sally, wife of Sen. John Danforth (R-Mo.), whose daughter, Johanna '90, attended a '31 spring luncheon year ago. To Mettie and all Dunc's family the Class extends its sympathy.

Ralph Cyrus Heath '31

RETIRED PROFESSOR at Wake Forest College, Cy died June 6, 1990, at his home in Spruce Pine, N.C. A Hoosier, he lived for many years in his native state of Indiana. During WWII, Cy served in the Air Force in the China-Burma-India area and was awarded a Presidential Unit Citation. In addition to teaching, Cy was a member of the American Economic Assn., the American Market Assn., and the American Assn. of University Professors. To his widow, Zala, and their family, we tender our sympathy.

Richard B. Hutchinson '31

COMING TO US FROM Lawrenceville, "Hutch," as most of us called him, died at his home in Jobstown, N.J., Mar. 15, 1991. In college he majored in engineering, which eventually led to his association as engineer with the Union Carbide Nuclear Division, Oak Ridge, Tenn. He was a member of the Philadelphia Society for the Promotion of Agriculture, farming being one of the loves of his life. His own family background included several Princetonians, beginning with his grandfather of the Class of 1869. The same kind of Princeton connection was enjoyed by his wife "Mimi" who was, among other relatives, a cousin of our Meek Keen. To his widow and family, the Class conveys its sympathy.

Llewellyn E. Oakley '31

VICTIM OF A SUDDEN STROKE, Llew died Feb. 6, 1991, at his home in Shaker Heights, Oh. He came to us from Kent, where he was on several athletic teams. At Princeton he was on the football team, pulled an oar at crew, and played lacrosse. In Cleveland, he worked for the International Milling Co., and later as consultant with Sherwin-Williams.

Llew's brother, Roderick, was also '31, and his uncle was '03, his father '07, and his only survivor is a nephew, Roderick S. Oakley '59, to whom we convey our sympathy.

Lawrence Priddy Jr. '31

LARRY PRIDDY died Mar. 10, 1990, in Menlo Park, Calif. He entered Princeton after graduating from Lawrenceville, where he was in the band, on the school paper board, and was a member of the Press Club. At Princeton, he was a member of Terrace Club. He spent four years in the Army in WWII, and was discharged in 1946 with the rank of major. Larry moved from N.Y. to California in 1952. While in N.Y., he held positions with the John Price Jones Corp., the Boys' Club of N.Y., Standard Oil Co. of N.J., and the Inst. of Life Insurance.

He moved to California as public relations representative for Tide Water Associated Oil Co. in San Francisco. Larry's professional affiliations were the Public Relations Round Table of San Francisco, San Francisco Bay Area Chapter of the Public Relations Society of America, and the Princeton Club of Northern Calif. Larry's hobbies were golf, color photography, gardening, swimming, and traveling. The Class extends its deep sympathy to his family.

Weatherly Reinmund '31

WETH REINMUND died Oct. 18, 1990. At Princeton he roomed with the late Beach Tredennick. He was an outstanding athlete, especially with respect to football and baseball.

Weth was associated, until his retirement at age 65, with the stock brokerage firm of Mitchell, Hutchins and Co., Inc., of which he was V.P. For a number of years he was the 1931 Class agent for the Annual Giving campaign. In Englewood, where he has always lived, Reinie has worked for the local Community Chest as well as other civic organizations. He has been a member of the Englewood Field Club, the Men's Club, and the Knickerbocker Country Club, among others.

To his widow, Fran, and to his children and grandchildren, the members of the Class of 1931 send their deepest sympathy.

The Class of 1931

Harold Byron Smith '31

FOLLOWING AN ILLNESS of several months, our classmate, Harold Byron Smith, died Oct. 30, 1990, in Good Shepherd Hospital, Barrington, Ill. He was 81 years old. At Princeton he roomed with Stirling Dickinson for three years and senior year with Heath Bowman.

Harold was one of our truly distinguished classmates. Upon graduation in 1931 he joined Illinois Tool Works and in five years succeeded his father as president. He held this position, as well as that of chairman and chief executive officer, until his retirement in 1982.

Harold became an alumni trustee of Princeton (1962-66). He held many directorships, being from time to time on the boards of international Harvester, Northern Illinois Gas Co., R.R. Donnelly & Sons, Northern Trust Co. and others.

He gave unsparingly of his time to civic and philanthropic organizations. At one time or another he was president of the Village of Barrington Hills School Board, chairman of the board of the Better Government Assn., president of the James C. King Home for Old Men, director of Children's Memorial Hospital, and a trustee of the Shedd Aquarium Society and the Chicago Horticultural Society.

His hobbies included golf, fishing, sailing, and horseback riding. His wife, Pauline Hart, "Polly," predeceased him by several years. He is survived by four sons, two of whom went to Princeton: Harold Jr. '55 and David '58, as well as by ten grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. A granddaughter, Stephanie Byron Smith, was in the Class of '78.

To his sons and to all of Harold's family, the Class of 1931 extends its deepest sympathy.

The Class of 1931

Alfred Uihlein '31

ALFRED UHLEIN DIED Dec. 4, 1990. He was a graduate of the Hotchkiss School. At Princeton, where he was on the crew and swimming team, and in later life, Al continued his love of athletics. Al's medical awards were legion, both as a professor at the Univ. of Minn. and as a practicing neurosurgeon at the Mayo Clinic. At Princeton, he roomed with Bram Rose and Ivy Lee and was a member of Charter Club. We remember the pictures of his beautiful family. To his children and grandchildren, we can say that we are proud to have known him.

M. Roos Wallis '31

M. ROOS WALLIS DIED Jan. 7, 1991. At Princeton he played soccer his freshman year. His entire business career was spent in the insurance business in the Philadelphia area. He was active in the Philadelphia Union League Club, the Merion Cricket Club, and the Bachelor's Barge Club, and did volunteer work at the Lankenau Hospital. He travelled extensively. In his later years he was active in the organization of the Waverly Heights Retirement Community, where he lived. His brothers were Allen D. '25 (deceased), J. Rendall '29 (deceased) and Calvin '32. His nephew was William G. Brown III '36. The Class extends its sympathy to his family.

The Class of 1931

William Sherrod Dilworth '32

BILL DILWORTH DIED of lung cancer Oct. 3, 1990. This sad news came to us only recently from his son Robert.

Bill spent much of his life in merchandising. He started as a stock boy at Macy's, living the life of Riley, as he wrote in our 50th yearbook, on $23 a week. He later got a job with Montgomery Ward and stayed there until his retirement in 1975. During WWII he served in the Navy as a supply officer with the Air Wing. Those of us with long memories of that war will remember the P.B.Y. flying boats for which he was responsible. He was discharged a lt. commander. He married Elise Von Sigel, the mother of his two sons, in 1937, but was divorced in 1963. Two years later, during a seven-year stint as a buyer for Ward's in Japan, he met and married Shizue Kaneko. When he finally hung up his shingle in Chicago, he was the manager of Montgomery Ward Intl. On retirement he and Shizue moved to Mountain Home, Ark., where they lived quietly and happily until shortly before his death. Shizue outlived him by only three weeks. Surviving are his two boys, Robert and James, two grandsons, and three granddaughters. We send our sincerest condolences to them.

The Class of 1932

J. Archbald Brooks '33

ARCH BROOKS DIED Mar. 16, 1991, in Midlothian, Va., where he had moved recently to be near his daughter Kathleen (Missy) Trotter.

Arch was born Oct. 23, 1910, in Scranton, Penn., where he spent almost all his life. He prepared at Hotchkiss. In college Arch was heavily involved with sports. Among other things, he was captain of lacrosse, of freshman football, and of freshman hockey. He was a member of Cap and Gown, and roomed with Al Rode. Not long after college, Arch joined the firm of J.H. Brooks & Co, Wilkes-Barre, Penn. Except for a few interludes he remained with them for many years, becoming managing partner. Later he joined Prudential-Bache, retiring at the end of 1990. He was a leader in civic affairs in Wilkes-Barre.

For Princeton and for 1933 Arch was a prominent figure. He was Class president from 1958 to 1963, and served on the Alumni Council. Arch married Kathleen Evanson June 26, 1937, in Scranton. She died a number of years ago. They had two sons, Scott, '62 and the late Cadwallader '64, and their daughter, Kathleen. Arch's father, the late John H. Brooks, was in the Class of 1895, his brother John H.Jr. was '31, and he had many alumni cousins. There are six grandchildren. He is also survived by a sister, Mrs. A. Whitney Griswold. To all the family, the Class of '33 expresses its profound sympathy. We have lost a good friend.

George W. Gray '33

GEORGE GRAY, DESCRIBED by the Cincinnati ENQUIRER as "industrialist and tennis player," died in Springdale, Ohio, Jan. 28, 1991. A memorial service was held Feb. 4 in the chapel at Maple Knoll Village, Glendale.

George was born Jan. 12, 1910, in Cincinnati. He prepared at Choate. In college he roomed with Bob Hatch. He had to leave college early because of the Depression.

After college George worked for several companies before joining the Verkamp Corp., with which his family was associated. He worked for them for 40 years, retiring as president in 1979.

George was an enthusiastic tennis player and a staunch supporter and photographer of wildlife. He played at almost every tennis club in Cincinnati and on Sanibel Island, Fla., where he had a summer place.

On June 4, 1937, George married Ruth Anne Allen, in Glendale. She survives him, as do their four children: Anne Gray Burrell, George A., William G., and A. Allen. There are seven grandchildren. Two sisters also survive, Dorothy Beach and Jane Harwood. The Class of '33 extends its sympathy to all the family.

The Class of 1933

John F. Kraft Jr. '33

JACK KRAFT DIED Apr. 13, 1991, in Naples, Fla., where he spent his winters. He also lived in Pittsburgh. Jack was born Oct. 2, 1910, in Pittsburgh. He prepared at Lawrenceville. In college he was a member of Cottage, and roomed with Herb Gooch.

During WWII Jack served in the Air Force in North Africa, Europe, and the Far East, receiving the Bronze Star and Croix de Guerre, and emerging as a major. Jack's lifelong career in the steel business began with his father's company, Washington Tin Plate. Later he started his own firm, John F. Kraft Jr., Inc., as a stainless steel broker and agent. At the time of his death he was the retired founder and president of Nicrolloy Co., of Pittsburgh.

On Jan. 31, 1938, Jack married Mary Spencer Gordon, who survives, as do their two sons, John F. and Frank Gordon, and four grandchildren. The Class of '33 extends its sympathy to the family.

The Class of 1933

Charles W. Root '33

CHARLIE ROOT DIED Mar. 27, 1991. He lived at Cold Spring Harbor, N.Y., where he had practiced law for many years.

Charlie was born Aug. 27, 1911, in N.Y.C. He prepared at Gunny. In college he was on the 150-lb. crew and was a member of Quad. He roomed with Giff Agnew, Jud Corrigan, Bud Crouse, Don Johnson, and Barney Koren.

After college Charlie went to Columbia Law School, graduating in 1936. After practicing law for two years in the city, he moved his practice to Huntington, Long Island. There he served with the firms of Tooz, Buck and Root; Root and Mack; and Root, Roberts and Byrne. He was active in civic affairs in Cold Spring Harbor.

On May 22, 1948, Charlie married Muriel Wilson, in N.Y.C. She survives, as does their daughter, Louise. The Class of '33 expresses its deep sympathy to them.

The Class of 1933

William John Blackman Stokes II '33

JACK STOKES, who for many years was a fixture of '33's presence in Princeton, died at the Mercer Medical Center there Feb. 20, 1991. A memorial service was held at the Stony Brook Friends Meeting Feb. 24.

Jack was born in Trenton June 22, 1909, and later lived in Princeton. He prepared at Asheville School. In college he was a member of Court Club.

After college Jack went to work for his grandfather's firm Joseph Stokes Rubber Co., in Trenton, of which he became president. In 1946 he became president of the newly established firm of Stokes-Trenton, Inc., specializing in plastic molding. He was very active in the plastic industry.

Jack was a longtime member of the Friends Meeting. He had served as director of the Trenton Banking Co., the Trenton Symphony Orchestra, and for many years president of the Carolyn Stokes Day Nursery.

On May 23, 1936, Jack married Marie Louise Reader in Easton, Penn. She survives him, as do their three daughters, Carol, Jill S. Halbert, and Robin S. Snyder.

There are six grandchildren.

Weedie and Jack were hosts to many classmates at Reunions and other times, and their daughters marched in many P-rades. He will be greatly missed. We send our deep sympathy to Weedie.

The Class of 1933

J. Gordon Summerfeldt '33

GORDON SUMMERFELDT died May 8, 1991, in Tavernier, Fla. A funeral service was held May 12 at the Mather-Hodge Funeral Home in Princeton.

Gordon was born Nov. 30, 1910, in Trenton, N.J. He prepared at Mercersburg. In college he was on the 150-lb. crew, a member of Court Club, and roomed with Toddy Miles.

After college, Gordon sold securities for some years. In 1940 he joined the Army. He spent five years in the service, emerging as a lt. colonel, but he remained at Ft. Monmouth until retirement, working on electronic research and development. During that time, he lived in Trenton, but then he moved to Key Largo, Fla., and also had a summer place in Murphy, N.C.

On June 6, 1936, Gordon married Marie Plummer in Trenton. They had two sons, David and Robert, and five grandchildren. Marie died in 1981. Later Gordon married Vera Holland, who survives.

Gordon was a regular at reunions at Princeton and in Florida. We will miss him. We send our deep sympathy to Vera and to the sons.

The Class of 1933

John Henry Van Dyke '34

JACK VAN DYKE, a leading businessman in his native Milwaukee and an internationally known yachtsman, died May 7, 1991, of cancer. He had been chairman of Condev Corp., president of Mineral Mining Co., and a longtime director of Northwestern Natl. Insurance Co. In sailing he won the North American Star Class championship in 1954 and subsequently campaigned successfully in various other one-design boats. In 1988, as he wrote a friend, "I opted for a more relaxed summer in a cruising-type boat, after some 60 years of racing small sailboats around buoys (and loving it)." Until recently he also enjoyed bird shooting, salmon fishing, rowing a single shell, and ice boating.

Jack is survived by his wife of 54 years, Nancy (Nannie) Post van Dyke (Pine Manor '36); a son, John C. II; two daughters, Patricia (Mrs. Robert) Gardner and Barbara (Mrs. Henrik) Moe; 12 grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. To them all we offer our sincere sympathies.

Frederick Phelps Ross '35

FRED DIED PEACEFULLY at his home in Fitchburg, Mass., Oct. 1, 1990. He had been slowed down by a stroke three years ago.

Fred was born in Detroit Nov. 8, 1915, and came to Princeton from Cranbrook School, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. He majored in biology and was elected to Sigma Xi, was undergraduate manager of Cloister, and (with Aaron Brown) was undergraduate bridge champion for two years.

He graduated from Harvard Medical School in 1939 and interned in the Boston medical complex. At the end of 1942, Fred and Olivia Vogel of Boston were married, and two weeks later he shipped out with the Army's Fifth General Hospital—the "Harvard Unit"—for service in Australia and New Guinea.

In 1952 Fred became surgeon-in-chief at Burbank Hospital in Fitchburg, a post he retained until 1985. Under his leadership a number of innovative programs were developed, including a surgical residency for leading interns from the Brigham Hospital for Women in Boston. A member of several medical associations, he served as chairman of the Fitchburg Board of Health, and was a fellow of the American College of Surgeons.

Fred's wife, Olivia, died in 1989. He is survived by his sons Jeffrey and David; daughters Frances, Sally, and Pippin; seven grandchildren; and a brother, David '44, to all of whom we send our sincere sympathy.

The Class of 1935

Robert Henry Alford '36

BOB DIED Sept. 17, 1990. He was born Oct. 23, 1914, in Chicago.

He prepared at the Kiski and McBurney Schools. At Princeton he majored in politics and was a member of Court Club. He was V.P. of the Woodrow Wilson Democratic Club. He graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1940.

Bob entered WWII service in Feb., 1941 as a private and served in the infantry in Italy. He was discharged in 1945 as a captain. He returned to active duty in 1951-52 and retired from the Army Reserve in 1956 as a lt. colonel.

Bob was with the Federal Communications Commission for some years, retiring in 1971 after 18 years as chief, transfer board processing applications for sale and transfer of commercial applications of commercial radio or TV stations.

The Alford then moved to Barcelona, Spain. In 1976 they moved back to the States and settled in Florida. Bob is survived by his widow, Marion Landraitis Alford; daughter, Melinda Brack; and five grandchildren. Bob was a devoted Princetonian. His many friends in the Class will indeed miss him.

Peter Kerr '36

AT AGE 75, Peter died Feb. 9, 1990, of natural causes at his home in Fort Meyers Beach, Fla.

He prepared at the Fountain Valley School. He left Princeton early and we believe he attended Temple Univ. He spent the rest of his life as a professional painter, sculptor, and teacher.

During WWII, he spent four years as a map editor for the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey working on aerial photography. He mapped parts of our East Coast and the Aleutian Islands. He had strong interests in ecology and marine animals.

He was chairman of the art dept. of the Cranbrook School from 1957 until his retirement in 1973. In the early 1950s, he operated the Kerr School of Art in Washington, D.C., and Nantucket, where he founded the Nantucket Artists' Assn. In later life he lived and worked in Fort Myers and Camden, Me.

Over the years we rarely heard from Peter. However, he indeed showed interest in Princeton when, in 1953, he presented the Firestone Library a signed framed photograph of Dr. James McCosh, who was Peter's grandfather's professor at Queens College in Dublin. Later, when Dr. McCosh was president of Princeton, he sent the photo to the Kerr family.

Peter is survived by sons Dr. Hugh H. Kerr and Dion D. Kerr, and two grandchildren.

The Class of 1936

John Albert Stillwell '36

JOHN DIED June 11, 1990, in England, where he lived for many years.

He prepared at the Trinity School in N.Y.C. At Princeton he majored in English and was a member of Cannon Club. He was on the freshman basketball team and 150-lb. crew.

John joined the British Royal Navy in early 1941 and retired as a lieutenant in the Fleet Air Arm in 1946 after considerable sea duty. Years ago he gave us a bit of interesting information. He was told that a 1941 act of Congress caused him to lose his U.S. citizenship. Since he served in the Royal Navy. He subsequently regained it by another congressional act because he served on the side of the Allies.

John spent his business career in the advertising business. He enjoyed golf and antique furniture. He was a past president of the American Club in London and was active in the Princeton Club of that city.

He is survived by his widow, Mary, and sons Robert John, Peter Albert, and Andrew Charles, and five grandchildren.

We will miss John who, although living far away from most of us, was indeed a loyal Princetonian and classmate.

The Class of 1936

Nicholas H. Larzelere '37

NICK LARZELERE DIED Mar. 3, 1991, of emphysema, leaving a daughter Nancy Puff of Mission Hills, Kan. and a son Townley of El Dorado Hills, Calif., as well as four grandchildren. His wife, Virginia, had died in 1983, and his cousin Hank Larzelere '37 in 1973.

Nick was in our large Lawrenceville contingent, being on the football and track teams. At Princeton he majored in psychology and was a member of the Two-Foot Club and Cottage, rooming all four years with Stoney Stollenwerck. He browsed about Europe on graduation and then took in Penn Law School and started a law career before the Navy got him. He was assigned to the U.S.S. McLANAHAN, DD 615, and cruised through Atlantic, Mediterranean, and European waters for three campaigns before being discharged a lieutenant and returning to the law, in Ardmore, Penn., with Duryea and Larzelere.

The Class sends its condolences to the family.

Franklin D. Wood II '37

WOODIE OF THE WHIMSICAL SENSE OF HUMOR said he spent his life producing crude oil and children, not to mention dachshunds. He died Feb. 22, 1991, of complications, leaving his widow, Nancy; five children; and seven grandchildren.

Prior to oil and children, he featured football, wrestling, and glee club at Mercersburg. At Princeton he was on the freshman wrestling team, was a member of Cannon, and majored in geology. Next came the oil phase, as production manager and partner in the family business of Wood and Sons in Somerset, Ky., interrupted in 1942 to enlist in the Army and become a link trainer (blind flying) instructor all around the country, particularly enjoying teaching WASPs. He continued as manager of Wood and Sons when it was sold in 1950 on the retirement of his father, Harry Wood '05 (Woodie's uncle was Gerald Wood '07). In 1953 he was with Natl. Lead of Ohio, being foreman of uranium refining for energy from ore concentrates, probably checked through from Africa by Vice Consul Harry Schwartz. The next ten-year stint was with Celotex, roofing materials, retiring in 1975. Nancy retired from International Paper until later.

All his life, Woodie was on the lookout for Princetonians. He was a faithful alumnus, despite having left at the end of sophomore year. All our condolences go to Nancy and the numerous brood.

Felix Porter Caruthers Jr. '38

PHIL CARUTHERS, renowned pioneer in the automation of machine tools, died of cancer Jan. 13, 1991. He is survived by his wife of 51 years, the former Jeanne Tunstall and their son, Felix P. III, and his family. He and Jeanne had built a beautiful retirement home in Three Rivers, Calif., in 1982 themselves. He rowed on our Varsity Crew sophomore year, joined Court Club, and graduated with honors in electrical engineering. He then joined EBASCO and advanced to assistant to the president. In 1943 he entered the Navy and was responsible for three Sperry radar plants, where his innovative testing procedures won three "E" awards and demonstrated his practical, innovative, and leadership attributes.

In 1946 he joined Sam Thompson '37's company, where he developed a tape-controlled precision turret lathe, the first in the field, and later the "Specialmatic" control center for machine tools, which could be programmed by the operator on the job. The Smithsonian has on display a "Specialmatic," several of his inventions, and a record of his career. His book ADAPTIVE CONTROL SYSTEMS is a required text in Princeton's Graduate School of Engineering. His classmates recognized his accomplishments through the Class Distinguished Service Award in 1986.

We offer our deep sympathy to his family and share their loss.

The Class of 1938

Nathaniel Augustus Boynton '39

AWARD-WINNING JOURNALIST, author, publisher, minor league baseball fan and devoted Princetonian, Nat died Jan. 13, 1991, a few hours after being stricken by a sudden heart attack while at church in Albany.

Nat's career began at the Watertown Times, took him to the Geneva Times as sports editor, to Albany as legislative correspondent for the Associated Press, and finally to General Electric for 18 years as publicist, editor, and speech writer. He left there to fulfill his ambition to become owner-publisher of a local weekly, the Delmar SPOTLIGHT, shaping it into a concerned community newspaper of substance and style. He was also instrumental in bringing minor league baseball to Geneva, a team now affiliated with the Chicago Cubs. But whether in journalism or baseball or as a father, he was a born coach with an eye for talent and a fight for helping it grow. For years he served Princeton spotting and interviewing admissions recruits for the Eastern N.Y. region. His 1988 autobiography MEDIA RAMS caught the essence of Nat and his lifelong enthusiasms.

With Barbara, their daughters, Cornelia and Elizabeth, and son, Larry, we share a keen sense of loss and deep gratitude for his days among us.

Donald McDonald Irwin '39

WHEN DON DIED at his home in Chevy Chase, Md., Mar. 4, 1991, our Class and our country lost a man much loved and admired. He had officially retired in 1984, but continued in journalism part time until 1990. Don's career began in 1940 at the HERALD TRIBUNE, moving to its Washington bureau in 1950. He joined the L.A. TIMES in Washington in 1963. Don covered every U.S. president from Truman through Reagan, as well as the Senate, political campaigns, and civil rights turmoil in the South. He was an aide to Nelson Rockefeller (when he was special assistant to President Eisenhower). In 1985 our Class honored Don with the 1939 Award.

Polly, his wife of 47 years, cheered and comforted him through the past two years with courage and determination matching his own. To her, their son Donald '65, daughters Edith and Sarah, five grandchildren, and Don's brother Wallace '40, we express our profound sympathy. Wallace said of Don: "He made friends the way a tree grows leaves." No wonder that at Don's memorial service in Washington Natl. Cathedral, members of the Gridiron Club arose and sang "Auld Lang Syne."

Charles Wills Vernon Jr. '39

CHUCK DIED Jan. 30, 1991, at his home in North Caldwell, N.J. Before retiring in 1983, he had been for 20 years V.P. of the export division of Champion International Corp. of Stamford, Conn. Chuck was in Champion's N.Y.C. office, from where he marketed paper and paper products overseas, principally in Australia, Europe, the Far East, and South Africa. He enjoyed all the travel this entailed, especially when his wife, Eleanor, could accompany him, as she frequently did until her death in 1989. Not surprisingly for a man who traveled so much, Chuck identified the highlights of his life as marriage, raising a family, and cultivating his friendships, including contacts with classmates whenever the occasion arose. He was a member of the Dunwothin Club and the Rangers of Montclair, the Deer Lake Club of Boonton, the Princeton Clubs of Montclair and N.Y. He was on the vestry of St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

To his sons Charles III '72 and Philip, and two grandchildren, we offer our sincere sympathy.

The Class of 1939

Peter Dean Forsch '40

ON MARCH 25, 1991, Pete Forsch died at his Greenwich, Conn., home. He is survived by his widow, Barbara, and daughter, Patricia, to whom we forward our deepest sympathy. The Forschs also maintained a home in Bermuda, where they spent much of their time.

In college Pete was a robust, hearty, and humorous soul who took part fully in campus life, played soccer and rugby, enjoyed Cap and Gown Club, and managed the squash team. His interest in Princeton endured mainly as a member of our 20th Reunion and Memorial Dormitory Committees.

After an exceptionally fine WWII Naval officer record, Pete was associated with the advertising industry, mostly with Young and Rubicam and later with Nestle Co., where he became V.P. for advertising and marketing services. He was credited with creating the name "Taster's Choice" for their freeze-dried coffee brand.

We will retain fond memories of Pete as and all-around and well-liked classmate who thoroughly enjoyed life and only recently commented he "wouldn't trade one bit of the past 71 years, except for closer contacts with roommates . . . and all the Class of 1940."

The Class of 1940

Rand Granville Carnahan '41

RAND CARNAHAN died of heart disease in Fresh Meadows, Long Island, Feb. 5, 1991. He is survived by his widow, Olivia McDaniel Carnahan; a son, Randy Jr.; a daughter, Martha; five grandchildren; and one great-grandchild.

A deceased brother Vance was in the Class of 1938.

We missed the chance to know much of Rand because he left Princeton well before graduation, eventually joining Pan American Airways, where he had a 37-year career, retiring in 1980 as director of statistics. He and Olivia traveled over most of Pan Am's wide world for business and pleasure. At home they were active in church and hospital charity drives.

Among Rand's special distinctions was his being directly descended from James Carnahan, Princeton's leader during the three decades of 1823-1854—the longest presidential tenure in her history.

We extend deep sympathy to Olivia and the Carnahan family.

The Class of 1941

R. Wayne Stickel '41

DICK STICKEL DIED at home on Hilton Head Island Jan. 4, 1991, following years of suffering from neurological disease. He and his wife Anita had moved there from N.J. following Dick's retirement from a distinguished career in Chatham, where he had established his own law firm and had served as district supervisor for Morris County.

Born in Newark, Dick was graduated from Lawrenceville. For his full four years at Princeton he roomed in Blair Hall with George Ayrcrigg, Jack Barker, Malcolm Forbes, Howard Isherwood, Marinus Contant, Lou Pyle, and Hugh Stone. Military service with the U.S. Air Force in Dayton, Oh., followed graduation. After the war it was Rutgers Law School, a short stint with his father and brother, the late Judge Fred G. Stickel and Fred G. Stickel III '37, then his own practice in Chatham where he represented the borough as its attorney for 20 years. He helped found the Chatham Savings and Loan Bank, guiding it in legal matters. Yet he still found time to serve as president of the Morris County Legal Aid Society and the Madison Y.M.C.A., be on the boards of the Cancer Society of West Orange and the Madison Museum of Early Trades and Crafts, and be active in Chatham's St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

Dick and Anita Stickel have eight children and eight grandchildren. We extend our sincere sympathy to them, to Anita, and to Dick's brother, Fred.

Robert Congdon Forgan '42

BOB DIED Dec. 10, 1990, at his home in Sarasota, Fla. Bob had suffered from arthritis throughout virtually his entire life, but it never slowed him down or diminished his enthusiasm for his family, his friends, and his work. Although severely crippled and eventually confined to a wheelchair, he continued working actively right up to the end.

Princeton was very much a part of Bob's life, with two uncles preceding him and two cousins following him. Bob came to Princeton from Choate, majored in economics, and was a member of Cottage Club. Following graduation he wanted to join his classmates in the service, but was classified 4F because of his arthritis. In Sept. 1942, however, the Army opened what they called "limited service" for which Bob volunteered and was accepted by the Air Force. He subsequently spent 1½ years at Randolph Field in Texas.

Upon returning to N.Y., he joined the Air Reduction Co. and was sent to Pittsburgh for four years. He missed his family, friends, and N.Y. so much that he resigned and returned to take a job at AMERICAN HOME magazine, where he stayed for 23 years as manager of the mail order dept. He loved his job and left only when American Home went under.

In 1973 Bob and his wife, Ruth, moved to their favorite town, Sarasota, Fla. He was on crutches at the time, but landed a job with the Tampa TRIBUNE covering a territory from Naples to Bradenton. He continued in this capacity for 16 years. After being confined to a wheelchair, he continued to work and received his last commission check only a couple of months before his death.

To his widow, Ruth, his cousin, James R. Forgan '52, and to the many other members of his family, the Class extends their sincerest sympathies.

Donald Miller Stuart '42

DON DIED Oct. 29, 1989, in Pearl River, N.Y., his home for over 40 years, following a stroke suffered about a month earlier. At the time of his death, Don was still engaged in arranging home mortgages through local banks. He had retired earlier from Consolidated Foods Corp., where he served in various executive capacities.

Don came to Princeton from Cheshire Academy, but left before graduation to join the Army. He served for four years during WWII with the 167th Anti-Aircraft Division in the African and European theaters. He rose from P.F.C. to captain during his period of service.

Following the war, he graduated from Wesleyan College in Connecticut and then joined Lederle Laboratories in Pearl River, N.Y. where he spent a number of years before joining Consolidated Foods.

He was very active in his community, serving as deputy county clerk in 1983 and 1984. He was also a member of the Orangetown Senior Citizens Advisory Committee and worked actively with the Rockland County Boy Scouts as well as the United Way. He was a member of the vestry at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Pearl River, as well.

Despite graduating from Wesleyan, Don had very fond memories of Princeton and participated whenever possible in many alumni activities. To his widow, Elizabeth; his daughter, Bonnie Gillen; his two sons, Douglas and David; and to all his family, the Class extends its most sincere sympathies.

Sharon Clay Risk '43

SHARON DIED in Manhattan Apr. 17, 1991, of a heart attack, suffered while en route to a planning meeting for our 50th reunion. George Small was with him at the time. Sharon was 71 years old, and lived in Chevy Chase, Md.

A native of Chicago, Sharon graduated from Princeton magna cum laude. Following Army Air Force service in WWII in the China-Burma-India Theater, from which he emerged with the rank of lieutenant, Sharon entered Yale Law School. Until 1957 he was associated with the Manhattan firm of Shearman and Sterling. He then joined the Securities and Exchange Commission, ultimately rising to the post of associate director of corporate finance.

In 1967, Sharon became affiliated with the Washington brokerage firm of Johnston, Lemon and Company, from which he retired in 1989.

He is survived by his widow, the former Louise G. Brown; twin daughters, Nancy Rollins '74 and Barbara de Boinville '74; a son, Clay '78; and five grandchildren. To all the family, we offer our deepest and most heartfelt condolences.

Samuel A. Burns II '46

SAM, ONE OF OUR STALWARTS, died May 1, 1991, in Vero Beach, Fla., of complications from cancer.

He was born in Harrisburg, Penn., and attended Mercersburg Academy before joining us. Leaving for wartime service as one of the youngest pilots in the Navy, he returned to graduate summa cum laude in economics. He received an M.A. in English literature from Stetson Univ. Sam's club was Cannon and he roomed with "O. S." Nichols, Max Keith, and Ed Adams.

Before moving to Florida, Sam was V.P. of Burns and Co., a family-owned business in Harrisburg. He resigned after 17 years to pursue a teaching career at Vero Beach Senior High School. In 1986, Sam received the Outstanding Teacher Award from the Univ. of Chicago. It is awarded to "a teacher who really made a difference—someone who introduced new vistas and realms of discovery, made serious intellectual demands for the first time, and knew how to channel a student's private interests into avenues for personal growth."

In 1979 he and his wife, Lori, joined the "Alliance for the Arts," a group of local citizens interested in promoting the arts in Vero Beach. He served as a member of the board of directors, was a member of the founding committee for the first annual children's art festival, and formed the Humanities Alliance Club of Vero Beach High School.

We remember Sam as a warm and gentle man. His influence on thousands of students was profound. Their lives are living monuments to him. To Lori, son Dana, and daughters Randall and Carole, we extend our deepest sympathy.

Robert E. Fenstermacher '46

BOB DIED Jan. 12, 1991, after a lengthy, difficult illness:

quadruple bypass and acute leukemia.

Bob graduated from Salisbury before joining us, left for service in the Army Medical Corps, and then went on to Washington Univ. in St. Louis to continue his pre-medical studies. He received his medical degree at U.Penn. in 1948 and served his internship at Allentown, Penn. Hospital.

Bob served in the Korean War as a physician and from 1950 until 1975, had a private practice in Allentown. He then reopened Allentown Hospital's emergency department, which had been closed for eight months. Until he retired in 1987, he was chairman of the Allentown Emergency Dept. Bob served on the medical board of the hospital and was a former director. He was also a director of the American Academy of General Practitioners and the American Academy of Emergency Physicians. He was a member of Christ Lutheran Church in Allentown.

We recall Bob as being extremely warm and friendly and genuinely caring about others; a neat guy, he was lucid up to the morning of his death and throughout his illness strove to comfort his family. At Princeton and throughout his life, up to the very end, our Bob was a "class act." Bob is survived by his widow, Lorraine; his daughters Margaret, Denise, Diane, Donna, and Ellen; his sister, Elizabeth; and eight grandchildren. To them all we send our condolences.

Charles Louis Gray Jr. '46

CHUCK GRAY DIED Sept. 9, 1990. Joining us from Deerfield, he majored in chemistry, left for service in the Army and returned to receive his A.B.

Most of Chuck's business career was with DuPont, his last assignment being as marketing manager of the freon products division. He retired in 1983 and set up his own computer consulting firm, which he headed at the time of his death.

Chuck, a prominent citizen of Wilmington, was involved in many community activities including membership on the board of the United Way, the Delaware Symphony, and the Alliance for the Mentally Ill. He also served as a vestryman and Christ Church in Wilmington. Chuck was a former Schools Committee member, president of P.A.A. of Delaware, and president of P.A.A. of Charlotte, N.C. He was a step-grandson of that "noble knight," the beloved Dean Christian Gauss, of fond memory.

Chuck is survived by his widow, Barbara; three daughters, Pamela Ann, Cynthia and Catherine; his mother Mrs. D. Christian Gauss; and two brothers, John '52 and David '48. To these and his many other relatives, we extend our deepest sympathy upon the loss of one of our own.

Eugene P. Gross '46 '49

EUGENE DIED in Jan. 1991 of pancreatic cancer. He was 64 and lived in Waltham, Mass.

Eugene received his bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees at Princeton and became a Carnegie Fellow at Harvard. He then became a research associate at M.I.T. and, subsequently, an assistant professor at Syracuse. At his death, Eugene held the Edward and Gertrude Swartz Chair in theoretical physics. He had been a full professor since 1951, was twice chairman of the physics department and was founder-chairman of the University's Council of the School of Science.

His research, reported in more than 80 public papers, focused on ways to determine the properties of systems containing very large numbers of particles, like quantum liquids, plasmas, and solids. He also conducted studies on the kinetic theory of gases and on the properties of liquid helium.

Eugene is survived by his widow, the former Sonja Keller; a son, Mark; and a brother, Theodore, to whom we extend our deepest sympathy.

Patrick Charles Maloney '46

OUR OWN "TRUE TIGER" died in Jan. 1990 of respiratory arrest after a very brief illness.

Pat arrived with us from Roosevelt High in Yonkers and roomed with "Mumbo" King. What wonderful memories we share with them of the "Nass," the "Annex," and the "Armpit." He majored in economics and was a member of Cap and Gown.

Pat graduated from Harvard Law in 1948 and started his own practice in Greenwich, Conn. which he headed until his retirement in 1984. For two years, Pat devoted himself to the care of his beloved wife, Mary, and six months after her death, he joined her.

Pat was at our 40th and went back for countless football games. He was devoted to the Class. We shall miss our ever congenial companion and friend. To his sons, Charles '80, and his daughter, Nora Ann, we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

N. Henry Moss '46

HENRY DIED suddenly Feb. 26, 1991.

Henry came to us from Philadelphia Central High School, graduated and received his M.D. from U.Penn. in 1948. He became a captain in the U.S. Air Force, serving in Fairbanks, Alaska, as chief of surgery at Ladd A.F.B.

A practicing surgeon for more than 40 years, Henry was associate clinical professor of surgery and attending surgeon at Albert Einstein Medical Center and Temple Univ. Health Services Center. Additionally, he was attending surgeon at West Park Hospital and Rolling Hills Hospital.

During his career Henry developed interests in the fields of cancer, metabolic response to surgery and trauma, nutrition, and convalescence. He was the author of over 50 professional articles and monographs.

Henry was president and co-founder of the Academy of Sciences at Philadelphia and co-chairman of the recent Conference on Global Interdependence on Science, Medicine, and Technology in an Era of Cooperation and Competition. He was a fellow of the World Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a board member of the Philadelphia division of the American Cancer Society. Henry was a member of numerous professional and scientific organizations, including the Philadelphia Medical Society, the Philadelphia County Medical Society, and the American College of Surgeons.

Henry was a dedicated leader in the community and a kindly, caring human being. He was the number one fan and supporter of his wife Helen Kardon Moss, who, as Helen Kardon, is a distinguished opera singer. They had separate careers but walked hand in hand through life. Both returned to Princeton often, and Henry's love for his Class was an important part of his life. To Helen; their daughter Cathy, Dee Moss; sons, Bruce and Brian Kardon; and brother, Victor H. Moss, we extend our heartfelt sympathy and in our own way share his loss.

William H. Short '46 '52

BILL DIED Feb. 20, 1991, of cancer at Princeton Medical Center. He joined us in that memorable summer of 1942 before entering the Army and returned to receive his A.B. in 1949 and M.F.A. in 1952.

Bill was a prominent Princetonian architect and was considered a pioneer in restoring and preserving old buildings for modern use. Bill began his professional career in N.Y.C. with Holden McLaughlin and Assocs. and was selected by Frank Lloyd Wright and the Solomon R. Guggenheim Foundation to supervise construction of the Guggenheim Museum in the late 1950s. Partnership with Robert Venturi in the early sixties was followed by ten years of private practice in Princeton.

In 1974, he joined Jeremiah Ford III to found Short and Ford. Among his projects were the restorations of Drumthwacket, the official residence of the governor of New Jersey.

Bill was an early proponent of affordable housing and received a merit award for design excellence from the American Inst. of Architects and the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development for projects in Princeton.

Bill served the National Trust for Historic Preservation as one of two of N.J.'s advisers, was a member of the board of trustees of the N.J. Historical Society, and served as a trustee of the National Society of Princeton. He was a member of the Charter Club and was a member of the Alumni Council, A.P.G.A., Class Advisory Council, and was Class secretary and Class agent.

Just as he was an undergraduate, Bill was throughout his life a quiet-spoken, modest, and kindly gentleman. We shall miss him, as will the whole Princeton community. Bill is survived by a brother and sister-in-law, Winthrop and Janet Short, and three nephews. To them we extend our deepest sympathy.

Frederick C. White '46

FRED DIED at his home in San Francisco May 24, 1990, of complications arising from AIDS.

He arrived with us the summer of 1942 as part of the Choate contingent and majored in psychology. Fred graduated from Cornell Medical School and interned at Bellevue Hospital in N.Y.C. He later specialized in ophthalmology.

Fred served in the Korean War. He began his East Bay practice in 1967 and served on the staff of several East Bay hospitals and was a guest lecturer at the U.C.-Berkeley and San Francisco. He was a member of the Bay Area Physicians for Human Rights and the San Francisco bay area Gay Fathers Assn.

Our classmate was a quiet but friendly gentleman, and as a physician was highly regarded by patients and peers alike, for his expertise, and for his compassion.

Fred is survived by his three children, Kevin, Karen, and Frances White. To them we extend our deepest sympathy.

Paul R. Miller Jr. '47

WE LOST one of our most devoted and loyal classmates when Tony died Jan. 13, 1991, at his home in Amagansett, L.I., N.Y., after a long battle with leukemia. He is survived by Susan, his wife of over 40 years; three sons, Frederic, Daniel, and Paul; a daughter, Darthea Donaldson; and two grandchildren.

One of '47's large and distinguished Deerfield contingent, Tony arrived on campus in the fall of 1943, bringing great cachet to the fabulous fourth entry of Holder Hall. After a couple of years in the Navy, Tony returned to Tigertown, joined Quadrangle, and graduated with honors in S.P.I.A. in 1949.

Tony was a long-time pillar of the Montclair, N.J. community, while working as an editor of Business Week magazine and later as public relations director of Celanese Corp. He eventually moved to Weston, Mass., where he served as V.P. of Simmons College. In more recent years, Tony was a V.P. of the Council for Financial Aid to Education, Inc., and he and Susan lived in N.Y.C. and then at their beloved Amagansett home.

Tony was a great champion of the younger generation. He enjoyed life with high zest and ebullient enthusiasm. Who will ever forget those twinkling eyes, that broad flashing smile, or his elegant command of the mother tongue? Or the lively tunes he coaxed from the ivories, particularly on those enchanted occasions well after midnight in a Reunion tent after the band had departed?

To Susan and the children, the Class extends its deepest sympathy. We will miss this vibrant and special classmate.

John Hicks '60

JOHN HICKS DIED Feb. 22, 1991, just following his 52nd birthday Feb. 1. He was in the Univ. of Chicago hospital and had suffered a thyroid problem. The family has requested that contributions may be made to the Univ. of Chicago Thyroid Research, 5841 South Maryland Ave., Chicago, IL 60637.

For many years, John had been an important member of the Mayer, Brown, and Platt Trusts and Estates Practice Group in Chicago, handling income and estate tax planning. He began his legal career with another Chicago firm, Pope and Ballard, following his 1963 graduation from Northwestern Univ. Law School, and he joined Mayer, Brown in 1966. Only one year before he died, he had opened his own firm in Chicago, specializing in estate planning and taxes.

Born in St. Louis in 1939, John prepared for Princeton at New Trier High School in Winnetka, Ill., where he played football and ran track. He played freshman football at Princeton and majored in history, writing his thesis on "The Public Reaction to the Dismissal of General MacArthur." He joined Tiger Inn and roomed with John Fetter and Bill Stille. His quiet humor and good nature will be greatly missed by all who knew him in the classroom, club, or locker room.

John was a member of the Illinois and Chicago Bar assns.; and was secretary and director of the Arthur Anderson Foundation, also in Chicago; and the managing director of Rohan Art Associates, Ltd., of London. The Class extends its sympathy to his brother, William '56; his sister, Shelia; his widow and children, John Jr., Susan, Jennifer, and Elizabeth.
